QUEEN MARGRETHE

KING FREDERIK
Mourned by country

DENMARK MOURNS

King's Daughter Ascends Throne

COPENHAGEN (UPI) — Prime Minister Jens Otto Krag today proclaimed the eldest daughter of the late King Frederik IX as Denmark's Queen Margrethe II, the newest monarch in Europe's oldest monarchy.

"King Frederik IX is dead! Long live Her Majesty Queen Margrethe II!" Krag called out three times from the balcony of Christiansborg Palace as tradition requires.

Tens of thousands of her subjects cheered nine times and waved small Danish flags as Queen Margrethe II stepped out on the balcony for her first public appearance since she assumed her duties as ruler of the realm after her father's death.

The mood was a mixture of mourning for the late king, much loved by his subjects for his easy-going and informal manners, and joy for the new 31-year-old queen, who is equally popular in Denmark.

His casket rested in the royal Amalienborg Palace a stone's throw from Christiansborg during the proclamation of the new queen.

In keeping with tradition, Krag offered his and his Social Democratic minority government's resignation. And, also in keeping with tradition, the new head of state rejected their offer and asked Krag and his ministers to remain in the cabinet.

The proclamation ceremony lasted barely five minutes.

The new queen, dressed in black, stepped out on the balcony with Krag. The premier held a brief eulogy over the dead king and then wished the new queen welcome.

Queen Margrethe replied briefly and promised to try to carry on her father's work. "God will help me to bear this burden," she said.

She also made public her royal device—"God's help, the people's love, Denmark's strength."

After her brief speech the queen was joined by her husband, Prince Consort Henrik, and both waved to the crowds before they retired into the building that houses the government and the Folketing.

A hefty, 5-foot 10, Margrethe, formerly called "The Cow" behind her back, wears her hair short and dresses stylishly.

In 1966, Margrethe fell in love with a third secretary at the French embassy in London, Count Henri de la Borde de Monpezat, and married him a year later. They have a 3-year-old son, Frederik, who is next in line for the throne, and Prince Joachim, 2.

Margrethe, her mother Queen Ingrid, 61, Prince Henri and the king's other two daughters were at his bedside when he died at Copenhagen's Municipal Hospital.

Doctors said the king had been unconscious for 17 hours.

After radio and television flashed news of the king's death, hundreds of mourning Danes gathered in front of the royal Amalienborg Palace. A young man knelt in prayer with a lighted candle in his hands. Many, wiping away tears, intoned mournful hymns.

Frederik came to the throne on April 21, 1947, on the death of his father, Christian X. As a sailor he served on all vessel types except submarines and reached the rank of commander in 1935 after 14 years in the navy. He had his own command, a torpedo boat with a crew of 34 in 1933-4.

TRIBUTE TO A DEAD KING — Jens Hansen lowers the flag at the Aldersly Danish Home in San Rafael to half-staff, in tribute to Denmark's King Frederick IX, who died yesterday. The king visited the home Oct. 8, 1960. Hansen, a resident of the retirement home, has daily raised and lowered the United States and Danish flags on the home's twin flagpoles since he came to Marin from Santa Cruz four years ago. He left his native Vordingburg, Denmark, some 51 years ago, and returned for a brief visit 11 years ago.

Woman Arrested In Hired Murder Plot

Deputies Tipped By Shocked Station Owner

By MARY LEYDECKER

A San Rafael woman, who apparently thought the owner of a North Marin service station had Mafia connections, was arrested yesterday on suspicion of trying to hire him to murder her husband.

Booked into Marin County Jail on suspicion of soliciting the commission of a crime was Una Mettam, 42, of 27 Corrillo Drive, an accounting clerk at San Quentin Prison.

The chain of events which led to her arrest apparently started a couple of years ago with a light-hearted conversation in a San Rafael garage.

There the garage owner was telling a service station owner about his difficulty in collecting bad debts. The gas station man replied that "for $25 or $50" he'd take care of the debtors for the garage owner.

This remark was apparently repeated recently during a conversation in a bar and taken seriously by at least one of the listeners.

Sheriff's Lt. Guido Battaglia said yesterday that the service station owner told officers he was contacted by Mrs. Mettam on Jan. 6. The woman said to him, "I've been told you get rid of people."

Mrs. Mettam reportedly told the service station owner that she wanted her estranged husband, Frank Ronald Mettam, about 45, done away with so she could collect insurance money.

According to Inspector Harry Bock, the shocked service station owner immediately reported the conversation to the sheriff's department.

On Jan. 7, Bock said, Mrs. Mettam returned to the service station and handed the owner an envelope containing a typewritten message which listed her husband's name, what time he left for work, description of his car and other details.

This was followed by a telephone conversation Thursday night, which Bock tape recorded. Mrs. Mettam reportedly asked the service station owner what he would charge for staging an "accident" to her husband. ("It must be an autombile accident," she is alleged to have said.)

"You must have a pretty efficient organization," she is also reported as having told the service station man.

Bock said Mrs. Mettam had insured her husband, a San Francisco cab driver, for about $60,000. (An insurance man explained a wife could take out auto accident insurance on her husband without requiring him to have a physical examination.)

The last conversation between Mrs. Mettam and the station owner led to a warrant made out by the district attorney's office and signed by Judge E. Warren McGuire for Mrs. Mettam's arrest.

She was booked into Marin County Jail yesterday, where she was held today in lieu of $50,000 bail.

Three More In Races For Councils

Three more city council candidates formally tossed their hats in the ring yesterday for the April 11 municipal elections. Filings for the cities' ballots will close at noon, Feb. 3, in 10 Marin and two Southern Sonoma cities.

Since the filings opened Thursday, only the incumbent town clerk and treasurer in Corte Madera have completed the necessary nomination papers to get their names on the ballot.

The newly announced candidates include Allan N. Littman of Tiburon, Bart C. Mitchell of Rohnert Park and George M. Cagwin in Mill Valley.

Littman, 43, served on the Tiburon Planning Commission from 1967 through last year, and was its chairman in 1970 and 71.

He pledged to oppose the proposed construction of 360 dwelling units in the former railroad yards area, as contrary to the Tiburon Downtown Plan adopted during his commission chairmanship.

Littman also said he opposes increases in residential densities, large moderate-cost housing projects, rezoning of part of the city to accommodate apartments and further annexation bids by the city.

Littman has lived in Tiburon nine years and in Marin since 1954. He is a 1952 graduate of Harvard Law School and a partner in the San Francisco law firm of Pillsbury, Madison and Sutro.

He lives at 100 Rolling Hills Road with his wife, Caroline, and four children.

In Rohnert Park, the field of declared candidates expanded to five yesterday as Mitchell announced his candidacy.

Mitchell, 58, is a real estate broker and general building contractor. He has served on the Cotati School District board, but announced his resignation Tuesday effective March 31 so he can give more attention to the city council campaign.

New Political Crisis In Italy

ROME (UPI)—The coalition government of Prime Minister Emilio Colombo officially announced its resignation today, touching off a new Italian political crisis.

Colombo presented the resignation to President Giovanni Leone, a fellow-member of the Christian Democratic party, after a short meeting of the cabinet and more than two hours of discussions with his coalition partners.

Political sources said Colombo will seek the newly-elected president's permission to form a new government based on the center-left formula and with a clearer policy line.

Failure could mean calling national elections more than two years ahead of schedule.

Colombo's was the 32nd Italian government since the fall of fascism in 1943. He formed it in August 1970.

The economist premier had called a meeting of leaders of the four coalition parties—his own Christian Democrats, the Socialists, Social Democrats and Republicans—in an attempt to overcome differences which have paralyzed Italy's political and economic life for months.

Colombo took time off from talks with visiting Maltese Premier Dom Mintoff and British and North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) negotiators to keep his domestic engagement.

Political sources said Colombo considered his cabinet's resignation a foregone conclusion after the small but influential Republican party announced last week it was withdrawing support from him.

Instead of trying to avert a crisis, they said, the premier was looking forward and trying to work out a new program for a new government which could win approval from all four coalition parties.

Divisions in the coalition and resulting lack of government leadership had been blamed for Italy's political and economic drift.

Popular disenchantment with politicians has been steadily growing and labor unrest has hit the economy. Industrial production declined last year for the first time since World War II.

Aides said Colombo, considered one of Italy's most capable politicians, was trying to put an end to the trouble and make a fresh start with a new government program realistically reconciling the demands of his coalition partners.

These include Socialist demands for social reform and Republican demands for curbs on government spending.

Judge Denies New Angela Bail Plea

I-J Special Report

SAN FRANCISCO — A federal judge yesterday denied bail for Angela Davis while her attorneys were saying she is broke and the state should pay their fees.

U.S. District Court Judge William T. Sweigert, in denying bail for Miss Davis, said her 15-month confinement was "irrelevant" to the issue of bail and noted she "may even have contributed to or caused the delays" by dozens of motions and maneuvers filed by her attorneys.

He added, however, that "It is hard for the public, even for this court, to understand judicial procedures which can go on for months even in cases which, however sensational they may be, involve fairly simple factual issues."

The judge ruled that a California law denying bail in cases where the presumption of guilt is great is not unconsitutional.

Meanwhile, in Berkeley today, Miss Davis's chief attorney, Howard Moore Jr., said expenses for four lawyers as well as investigators in the case

Did Packard Resign Over Pakistan Arms?

NEW YORK (UPI)—Documents provided by columnist Jack Anderson indicated that Henry A. Kissinger wanted to explore the possibility of providing arms to Pakistan during its war with India, but Deputy Defense Secretary David Packard wanted to "find some way to stay out," the New York Times reported today.

The document, which the Times said was provided Anderson, was a summary of a Dec. 8 meeting of the Washington Special Action Group (WSAG) which had met periodically to discuss the IndoPakistan situation.

It was the latest in a series of what have been christened "The Anderson Papers" in which Anderson has published accounts of WSAG meetings chaired by Kissinger, President Nixon's special assistant for national security.

Earlier columns and minutes of the WSAG meetings chaired by Kissinger quoted the presidential adviser as saying the President had ordered an American policy favorable to Pakistan. The administration has not denied the accuracy of the documents, which Anderson said were provided by highly placed sources.

The minutes of the Dec. 8 meeting, marked "Secret-Sensitive" like the minutes of three previous meetings released by Anderson, said:

"Dr. Kissinger said that we are not trying to be evenhanded. There can be no doubt what the President wants. The President does not want to be evenhanded. The President belives that India is the attacker."

According to the minutes, "Dr. Kissinger stated that what we may be witnessing is a situation wherein a country (India) equipped and supported by the Soviets may be turning half of Pakistan into an impotent state and the other half into a vassal."

(India, together with several other nations, has accorded diplomatic recognition to Bangladesh, which formerly was East Pakistan and whose wish for independence eventually led to the conflict.)

The published document said Kissinger "referred to an expression of interest by King Hussein (of Jordan)" to provide American F104 Phantom jets to Pakistan.

The U.S. government, referred to as U.S.G. in the document, had cut off the sale of military supplies to Pakistan and India.

"Mr. Packard explained that we could not authorize the Jordanians to do anything that the U.S.G. could not do," the published document said. "If a third country had material that the U.S.G. did not have, that was one thing, but we could not allow Jordan to transfer the 104s unless we make a finding that the Paks, themselves, were eligible to purchase them from us directly."

The document contined: "Dr. Kissinger suggested that if we had not cut off the sale of arms to Pakistan, the current problem would not have arisen. Mr. Packard agreed."

A little later in the meeting, the document said, "Mr. Packard stated that the overriding consideration is the practical

Six Cars Smashed In Wild Joyride

A 16-year-old San Rafael boy was being held by San Rafael police today after a short-lived early morning joyride in which he destroyed two trees, smashed six vehicles and damaged two walls.

Police said the boy apparently stole a 1971 Chevrolet pickup truck from the driveway of its owner, Dino R. Lucchesi of 555 Canal Street, Apt. 14, at about 5:45 a.m. Lucchesi had reportedly started the truck's engine and then left it to warm up. He returned to find the truck stolen.

The youth got as far as the 1900 block of Fifth Avenue before the truck jumped a curb and began plowing into a series of parked cars.

The boy's identity was withheld by police because of an order by Judge Joseph G. Wilson of Marin Superior Court.

Police described the accident this way:

The youth was westbound on Fifth Avenue when the truck jumped a curb in front of 1946 Fifth Avenue. He struck a tree before hitting a car parked in the driveway at 1944-1946 Fifth. That car struck another and the second struck still another.

The truck kept moving, ripping through a flower bed and across the driveway at 1948-50 Fifth Avenue and into a carport there. The truck struck two more parked cars in the carport, shoving one into a wall of the residence and the other into a carport wall.

The bumper on the last vehicle locked with the truck's bumper, and the youth — attempting to back away from the scene of destruction, pulled the car out of the carport and to the street curb before the bumpers unlocked.

The youth then backed over a second tree, proceeded in reverse along Fifth Avenue, turning onto J Street where police found the truck parked about 50 feet north of Fifth.

The boy was found hiding on the floor of another truck parked in front of the stolen pickup, police said.

WIRE NEWS BRIEFS From Everywhere

Agrees To Terms

BRUSSELS (UPI) — Norway agreed to terms of joining the European Common Market today, but Norwegian officials said "high hurdles" still remained to be cleared.

The Norwegian agreement to a formula for the protection of Norwegian fishery interests completed the negotiations that will end next week with the signature of treaties of accession by the four membership candidates — Britain, Ireland, Denmark and Norway.

Attache Beaten

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The State Department said today a military attache from the U.S. embassy in Moscow was beaten by a crowd of 14 to 20 persons Jan. 5 at the airport at Riga, the capital of Soviet Latvia.

Air Force Capt. Elmer L. Alderfer was not seriously injured in the incident, which took place during an approved visit.

A State Department spokesman said the United States lodged a strong protest of the incident both in Moscow and Washington on Jan.6, but had received no reply from the Soviets.

Air Strike Looms

OTTAWA (UPI) — Canada faces the threat of a nationwide shutdown of all commercial air operations early Monday by members of the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association (CATCA) who voted yesterday to strike unless the Canadian government meets there contract demands.

CATCA President J.R. Campbell said members rejected a conciliation board's proposal to end the contract dispute and voted 1,539 to 85 for strike action.

A controllers strike, which would be the first ever in Canadian history, would ground all commercial air traffic over Canada, including North American and polar flights that pass through Canadian air space. It would also affect regional carriers and all international airlines which have stops in Canada.

Partial Victory

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Third-class mail users won a partial victory yesterday when U.S. District Judge George L. Hart Jr. ordered a temporary rate increase reduced from 24 per cent to 20 per cent.

Hart also directed that the temporary increase not be put into effect until May 16 if a permanent increase has not gone into effect by then.

Lawyers for the U.S. Postal Service indicated they would appeal Hart's ruling.

Shouting Match At Soledad Trial

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)— The murder trial of the two "Soledad Brothers" erupted into a shouting match Friday and the judge threatened to clear the courtroom of spectators and throw them in jail.

"If i hear any more cynical laughter out there, I'll clear you all out and give you five days and $500," said Superior Court Judge S. Lee Vavuris when laughter rippled through the court.

The fireworks started while defense attorney Floyd Silliman was questioning an ex-convict who previously testified he watched the slaying of a guard.

Humphrey Will Enter Five More Primaries

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Miss., announced today he would wage primary battles in five additional states in his bid for the Democratic presidential nomination.

He told a Washington news conference he would definitely enter the primaries in Wisconsin, Nebraska, Maryland, New Jersey and California. Humphrey also held out the likelihood that he would appear on the ballot in West Virginia and New York.

Previously, Humphrey had formally entered primaries in Florida's March 14 primary and Pennsylvania's April 25 race.

The Minnesota senator ruled out two critical primaries this year —New Hampshire and Illinois. He said the filing deadline for both had passed before a decision could be made.

He also told newsmen that in his first week of active campaigning in Florida he was "rather surprised" that school busing did not seem to be a major issue among rural voters in that state.

He said the only questions he was asked about busing came from reporters, not the voters.

The voters told him, Humphrey said, that they were "working out" the problem and were integrating their schools.

One of Humphrey's main rivals in Florida, Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, became a focal point of dispute between both Democrats and Republicans.

Booted Congressman Leaves Moscow

MOSCOW (UPI)—Rep. James H. Scheuer, D-N.Y., expelled by the Soviets, said he was leaving today convinced he had done nothing improper by investigating the status of Soviet Jews.

Scheuer was ordered expelled Friday on unspecified charges of "improper activity" —the first elected U.S. official ever kicked out of the Soviet Union. He had toured the country with a Congressional group invited to study Soviet education.

Scheuer left Leningrad by plane at 1:10 p.m. (5:10 a.m. EST) and flew to London by way of Stockholm and Copenhagen.

At the stop in Stockholm, he told newsmen at the airport that "it's a wonderful feeling to get out of the aircraft here in Stockholm and be out of Soviet reach."

"I've met with six or eight Jewish Soviet citizens who wish to emigrate. This is not a crime under Soviet law and indeed the right to emigrate is assured to Soviet citizens by virtue of Soviet ratification of various U.N. documents."

Earlier this week Scheuer was arrested by Moscow police at the home of a Jewish scientist who had applied unsuccessfully to emigrate to Israel. Police held Scheuer for 40 minutes and freed him with the explanation the arrest was a case of "mistaken identity."

Scheuer, a Jew, said he had broken no Soviet law in his contacts with Soviet Jews and had even tried to "avoid controversy" out of consideration for President Nixon's forthcoming visit.

"I've brought nothing into this country which was not permitted and I have committed absolutely no act which was illegal or inappropriate," he said.

"Those documents I brought were nothing more than names, addresses and telephone numbers of people I wished to meet.

"In my talks with Soviet officials all over the country, the question of the Jewish minority did come up frequently," Scheuer said.

A U.S. embassy spokesman said the Soviets had declined to specify what "improper activities" Scheuer was accused of. The embassy statement indicated its assumption the Jewish question was the crux.

December Wholesale Price Climb—Biggest In 10 Months

WASHINGTON (UPI) —The new chairman of President Nixon's Council of Economic Advisers believes wholesale prices, which showed their steepest jump in 10 months in December, will show an additional "bulge" the next month or two before stabilizing.

Government economists announced Friday that wholesale prices went up by 0.8 per cent last month, reflecting the relaxation of pressures built up during the 90-day wage-price-rents freeze which ended in mid-November.

It was the largest gain in the wholesale index —which usually reflects itself at the retail level after some time lag — since February, 1971, when the gain was 0.9 per cent. It was eight times the increase in November. But Dr. Herbert Stein, who heads Nixon's economic advisers, pointed out the government had predicted a jump in prices would follow the bulge. He said he was not disappointed.

"The news, it seems to me, is how small the rise is," Stein said.

However, William Proxmire, D-Wis., chairman of Congress' Joint Economic Committee, described the increase as a "dramatic and disappointing jump."

"The President may claim that 1971 was a good year, but as far as prices are concerned, we ended 1971 in the same dismal position we were in last February," Proxmire said.

Disputing this view, Stein went on to say the behavior of wholesale prices in December was "a most heartening indication of significant progress in our battle against inflation."

"I do not think the anticipated bulge is all behind us," Stein said. "We may yet see some larger increases in industrial commodity prices. But we do seem to be making the transition successfully."

Stein said economic controls would continue until prices and wages rise by less than the guideline ceilings set by the Price Commission and the Pay Board.

The two agencies hope to lower the rate of inflation to 2 to 3 per cent annually by the end of the year.

Prices of farm products and processed foods and feeds showed the greatest increase, 2 per cent, during December. They accounted for two-thirds of the overall advance in the index, although about 40 per cent of the commodities are exempted from Phase II controls.

Consumer finished goods went up 1 per cent and industrial commodities rose by 0.3 per cent. Almost half this rise was due to higher prices for cars and trucks.

In other economic developments:

The Price Commission approved an average 2 per cent price increase in 1972 for all products of the Coca Cola Co. and Abbott Laboratories, a major drug manufacturer; and a 2.8 per cent boost for domestic consumer products of Philco-Ford Corp.

The Commerce Department reported a $50 million decline in manufacturing and trade inventories in November, reversing a $545 million increase in October and signaling an increase in consumer spending.

A random check of stores in the 22 northern counties of Illinois showed about 70 per cent of the businesses had not complied with federal base price posting requirements. The Internal Revenue Service said the findings resulted from a three-day check this week by 100 inspectors.

22 Arrested In Belfast Area

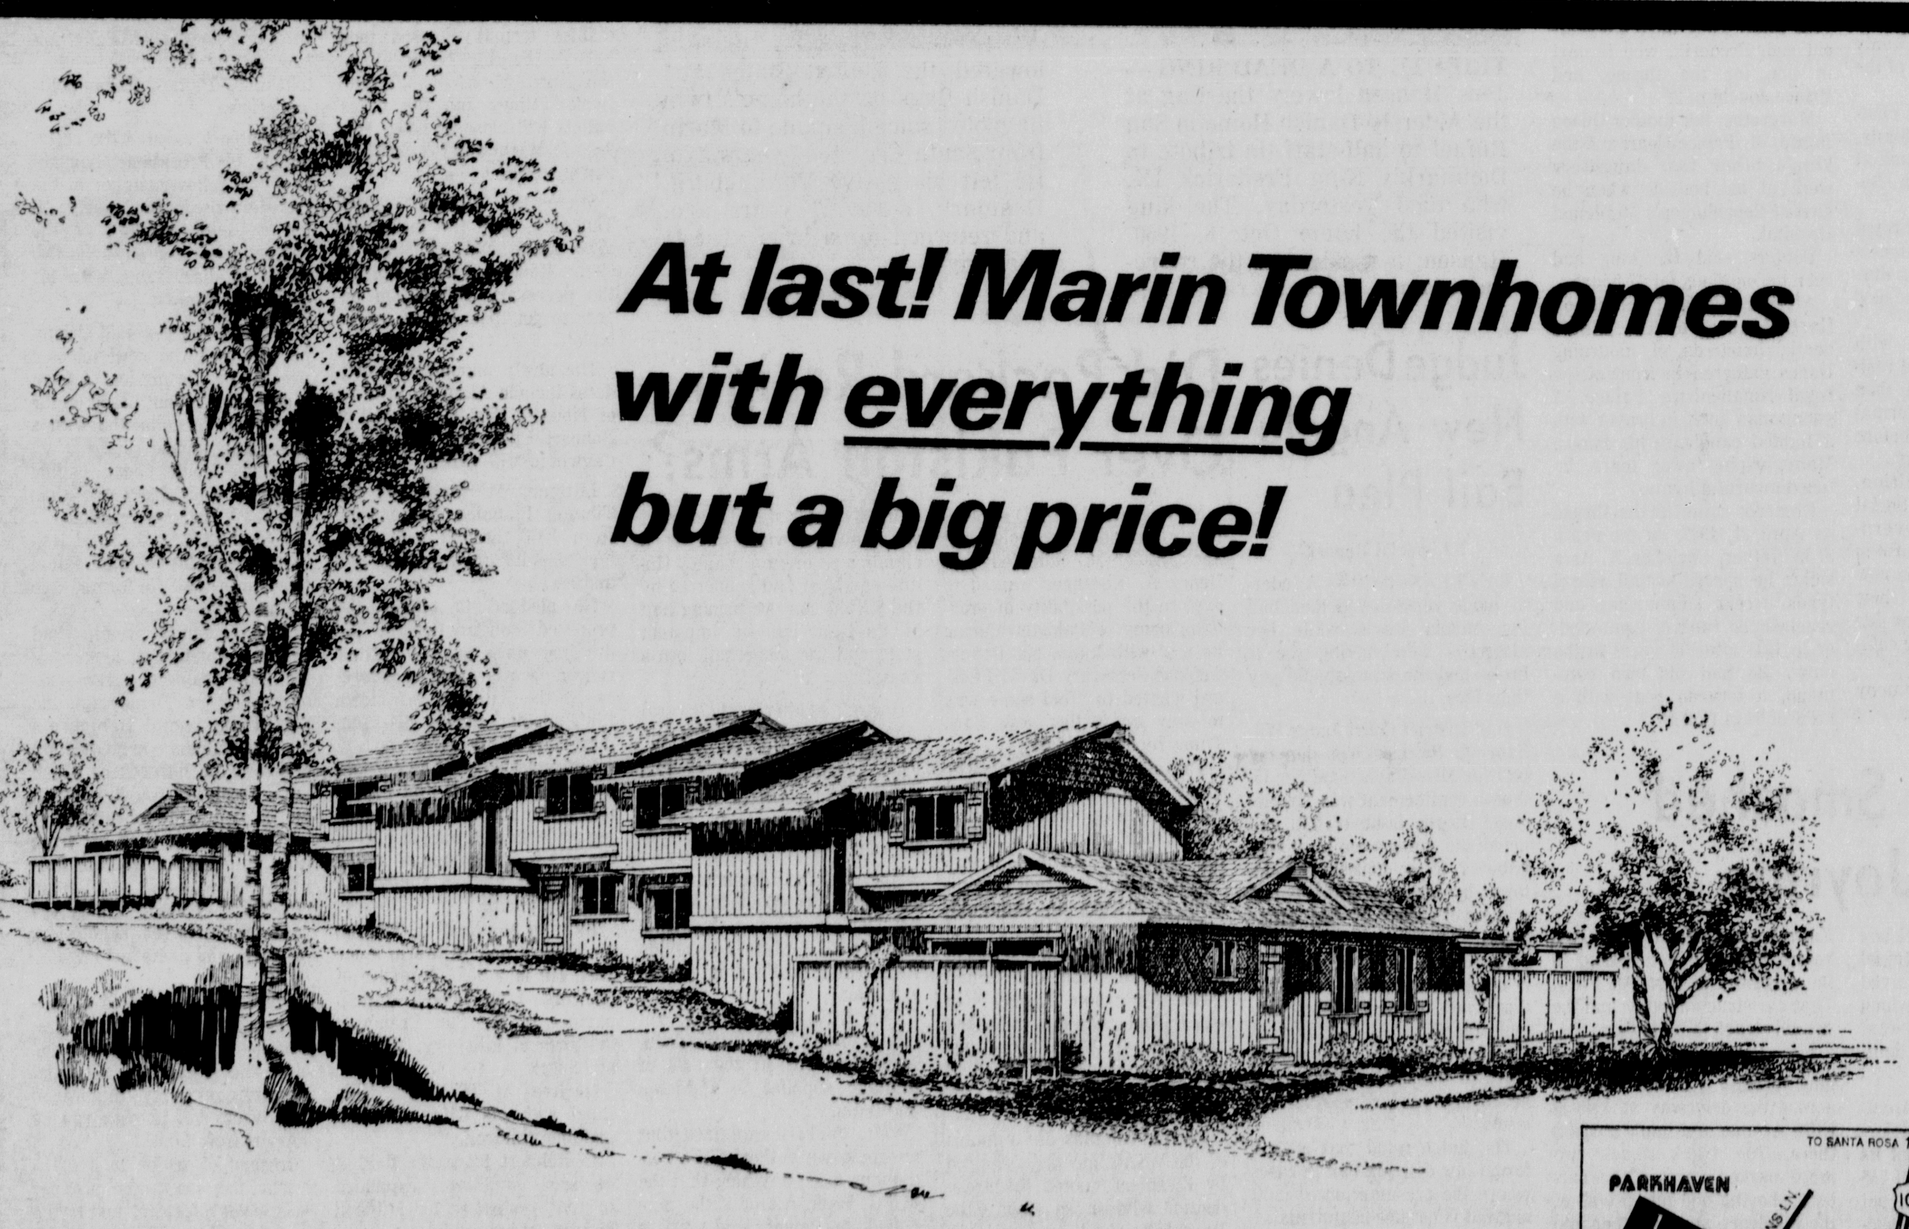

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI)—British troops arrested 22 men today in raids on suspected hideouts of the outlawed Irish Republican Army (IRA), bringing the total arrested in the new year to well over 200, a security spokesman said.

Angry women and youths attacked British patrols making arrests in Belfast's Roman Catholic Ardoyne and Andersonstown areas, and soldiers drove off the mobs with nausea gas and rubber bullets to take the prisoners away, an army spokesman said.

British patrols came under sniper fire at least eight times during the night and today in Belfast and maghera, County Londonderry.

Peking Gradually Sapping Military Political Power

By HENRY S. HAYWARD
The Christian Science Monitor News Service
©1972 The Christian Science Publishing Society

HONG KONG — Peking's powerholders are steadily whittling down the political strength of the vast Chinese Communist military machine — the People's Liberation Army.

Western observers term this the most significant long-term trend in recent Chinese mainland affairs.

The trend dates back at least to last September and might have begun several months earlier, when former Vice-Chairman Lin Piao suddenly dropped from sight.

What is happening, according to experts here, is that the People's Liberation Army (PLA) is being brought more under the direct control of the Communist Party apparatus once again.

This reverses a development since the latter days of the so-called "Cultural Revolution." Then, the military forces of the People's Republic were a major factor helping chairman Mao Tse-tung and his colleagues bring the internal turmoil under firm political rein.

Since then, and until recently, almost every facet of Chinese life was marked by heavy PLA involvement, including military representatives in education, business, culture, and political affairs.

Now the levers of political power gradually are being withdrawn from military hands.

The change appears to be deliberately gradual and gentle. It is almost imperceptible to outsiders — except for the highly publicized mystery about Lin Piao and his top military cohorts.

Too much military power being wielded in the Chinese political structure may well have been what caused Lin Piao's downfall, in the estimate of some authorities.

By moving slowly, the Peking government expects to bring the PLA back down to size while preventing pro-PLA or pro-Lin sentiment from crystallizing.

"The situation is still unfolding," one Veteran China-watcher explained. "The process is one of erosion, not frontal attacks, as was the case during the 'Cultural Revolution' when real or imagined enemies of the state were hunted down openly."

The new trend is visible in the increased attention of the military organization to more customary armed forces activities. Observers scent less PLA involvement in business, politics, thought control, high party positions.

The military nonetheless is firmly entrenched in the Chinese power structure and is not being shaken out overnight. Chinese leaders have no desire to weaken PLA morale or effectiveness by cracking down too broadly — certainly not while the potential military threat from the Soviet Union remains a paramount concern of the Peking hierarchy.

This reestablishment of party control is almost certainly not yet complete. Much remains to be done, for example, among China's 29 provinces and major municipalities. Virtually all of these subdivisions have PLA representatives at or near the topmost posts.

Purges at the top of the Peking regime thus far have not been followed at provincial levels.

Indeed, during the second week of December, Hunan province (Chairman Mao's home province and therefore extra significiant in the Chinese pecking order) held the first provincial Communist Party plenary meeting since the Lin Piao affair.

Hunan's first secretary, Hua Kuo-feng, in the past has been overshadowed by military officials in the area. Recently Hua has appeared in Peking, apparently having been promoted in the wake of the Lin trouble.

Yet two other Hunan leaders, Pu Chan-ya and Yang Ta-yi, are both military men who were identified as present at the Hunan party conclave.

It is an event such as this which has helped convince outside observers that no overall recriminations against the military are yet underway in the wake of the Lin ouster.

On the other hand, another military man, Hsu Shih-yu, the Hanking military region commander and a high-ranking party man as well, now is a conspicuously absent leader. He has not been seen in public since last June, the same time as Lin Piao also dropped from view.

But some still feel Hsu could emerge as the new PLA chief of staff, replacing the missing Hung Yung-shieng.

200 Attend Rally For Maoist Professor

STANFORD (UPI) —Some 200 persons turned out Friday at a noon rally in Stanford University's White Plaza for suspended professor H. Bruce Franklin.

A faculty advisory committee recently recommended that the admitted Maoist teacher be fired for disruptions last year at the school's computer center. The board of trustees will act on the recommendation Jan. 22 at a special meeting in San Francisco.

Single Sewage Agency To Be Eyed By Supervisors

Replacement of southern and central Marin's balkanized sanitary districts by a single agency for collection, treatment and disposal of sewage will be recommended to the Marin County Board of Supervisors Tuesday by John F. Barrows, county administrator.

Barrows said yesterday that he will propose that eight districts be dissolved and their functions be taken over by the Marin Municipal Water District.

The idea has been under discussion for years.

If the supervisors approve, the plan will go to the Marin County Local Agency Formation Commission and eventually to the districts' voters for approval.

Many of the districts involved are under fire from the Bay Regional Water Quality Control Board for failing to meet treatment standards. In some cases the districts have been forbidden to make sewer connections to new construction.

Barrows explained the water district is not opposed to taking over the sanitary chore, but that its advisory committee of sanitary district representatives split over the takeover idea — and eventually recommended an "umbrella" agency to take over treatment of all districts' waste, but not the initial collection of sewage.

An "umbrella" district would be simply another layer of government, Barrows said yesterday.

Using the water district as the only sewage collection and treatment agency would offer "economics of administration ... and more responsive and responsible government for the people served," Barrows said in his recommendation. A single agency for both distribution of water and handling of waste would speed the realization of water recycling proposals in Marin, he added.

The affected sanitary districts include Alto, Homestead Valley, Richardson Bay, Almonte, Sausalito-Marin City and Tiburon in the Richardson Bay watershed, and the Corte Madera and Ross Valley districts in the Corte Madera Creek area.

Also installed were five board members: Edward S. Lewis, Edward W. Reichmuth, Guy Rockey, Alvin Baudour and Theodore J. Homen.

Razor Cleaning Fluid Is Fatal

Police said Andrew Schneider was found face down in the bathtub at his home with a nearly empty bottle of the fluid next to him.

Petition On Rezoning Is Verified

An initiative petition for rezoning of Marin Town and Country Club in Fairfax has been verified as having sufficient signatures, according to Priscilla Gray of the Preserve Land and Nature (PLAN) committee.

The county elections office has verified that 677 of the 794 signatures on petitions were valid. The figure represents more than 15 per cent of the city's registered voters, Mrs. Gray said.

With more than 15 per cent, the Fairfax City Council has the choice of rezoning the site or calling an election to let voters decide the issue.

PLAN is seeking the rezoning to prevent residential development of the 23.5-acre club parcel, and its preservation as a recreation area.

Inmate Is Found Digging Way Out

Hall, a 29-year-old convicted robber from Los Angeles, was discovered at 2:45 p.m. hiding below the floor of the South Block, James V. Fitzgerald, officer of the day, said today.

He had been missing since Monday when he failed to return to his job in the prison clothing shop after a mid-afternoon appointment at the prison education office.

When found, he had punched a hole in the concrete floor of the locked alley which carries utilities between cells in the prison's South Block, but was stymied by a boulder in his path, Fitzgerald said.

Three inmates, including a plumber and an electrician, are being held on suspicion of aiding the elaborate escape attempt, Fitzgerald said.

Hall was equipped with makeshift digging tools, an electric light and a water line. He had opened a nearby sewer line to flush away dirt, Fitzgerald said.

The officer said the tunnel, aimed straight down, had not progressed very far. He said the would-be escapee would have had to tunnel about 200 feet to the shore of San Francisco Bay to escape.

He said no prisoner has ever escaped the century-old prison by tunneling.

Hall first entered prison in 1966 and is now serving four concurrent sentences ranging from one year to life to five years to life for robbery and assault with a deadly weapon.

Prison officials had suspected that Hall was hiding inside the prison walls, but guards reportedly had ended an intensive search for him Wednesday.

Three days after the meeting, Packard announced his resignation, citing personal financial reasons. Disagreement with other officials on America's posture in the Indo-Pakistani conflict has not been advanced as a possible reason behind his resignation.

He said a nationwide campaign to raise funds had not come up with enough money to cover expenses and said this was the reason he had filed a motion asking the state to "pay reasonable expenses."

A hearing on this motion as well as one asking Miss Davis's trial not be held in San Jose are expected this week.

The former university professor is being held in jail in Palo Alto after her case was transferred from Marin to Santa Clara County.

She is accused of murder, conspiracy and kidnapping in connection with the August 1970 shoot-out at the Marin Civic Center.

Her trial is due to start Jan. 31, but defense attorneys have indicated they did not think it will.

Rail Rights Funds Will Be Sought

A $1 million federal loan to buy surplus railroad rights-of-way in Marin for future transit use will be sought by the Golden Gate Bridge District.

Northwestern Pacific Railroad has abandoned its right-of-way south of Corte Madera, and its parent company, Southern Pacific Railroad, had given the district only until today to act on its previously announced intention to acquire the narrow strip of land to Sausalito.

Bridge directors, meeting yesterday, agreed that in addition to applying for tha federal loan, they will seek an immediate option or lease for the right-of-way. Marin County Transit District directors agreed Tuesday to split the cost of the option or lease.

Long-range transit plans by the bridge district envision a transit system with an exclusive right-of-way from Novato to downtown San Francisco, using the railroad right-of-way in Marin, a second deck for transit on the bridge and tunnels in San Francisco.

A letter from the City of Mill Valley, however, objected to use of the right-of-way for other than hiking and bicycling. The city letter advised also that the city itself hopes to buy the right-of-way.

The bridge district's attorney, Thomas M. Jenkins, stressed that the $1 million figure was used only as an estimate, and that the actual value of the right-of-way should be "much lower."

The majority of the right-of-way is owned in fee title by the Southern Pacific, Jenkins said, but the remainder will revert to the heirs of the original property owners now that it no longer is used by the railroad.

The railroad has asked $600,000 for its portion, he noted, adding this was "way too high."

Jenkins won quick and unanimous board approval for both the loan and option or lease after he warned that the railroad was "prepared to start selling off the land as of Monday if we take no action."

More Than One Million Ride Ferry

More than a million people rode the Golden Gate Bridge District's Sausalito ferry in 1971, Gen. Mgr. Dale W. Luehring reported yesterday.

He also cited a 99 per cent perfect performance record in the ferryboat's first full year of operation.

The total for the year was 1,040,720 passengers, he told district directors. Patronage each month averaged 45 per cent up from like periods in 1970, he said.

During the year, 7,043 trips were made by the ferryboat, with 63 trips canceled because of maintenance, repairs, labor disputes or fog, "a performance record of 99 per cent." Luehring added that bus service was substituted when the ferryboat was out of service, "so that the commuters had virtually a 100 per cent reliability service."

Lagoon Study Wins Approval

The study is the first phase of a project to install a tidal lock at the mouth of the lagoon. District voters approved a $700,000 bond issue for the lock project Tuesday.

Directors, meeting Thursday, authorized consulting engineer John A. Blume of San Francisco to start the study.

William F. Aubel, an incumbent, and Kenneth G. Majors were installed as directors. Both were appointed last fall because the posts were uncontested.

Span Board Eyes Bus Loads, Votes To Buy 20 More Units

Golden Gate Bridge District directors, eyeing staff reports of heavy patronage on the district's two-week-old bus system, yesterday voted unanimously to buy 20 more new buses.

The purchase will only be made, however, if the federal government agrees to pay two-thirds of the cost, which will total about $960,000.

District officials confidently predicted quick agreement to the purchase by Washington, noting the district already has received a $6.2 million grant for the buy system.

The addition of 20 buses would bring the district's fleet to 174 buses, including 20 leased for a year from Greyhound Lines.

More than 5,000 commuters have been counted aboard the new fleet each day this past week, less than 1,000 below its maximum carrying capacity.

Gen. Mgr. Dale W. Luehring said the 20 new buses would be the same as the 112 new ones with high-back reclining seats, which have proved more popular than the 20 with more conventional seats.

The new buses are so popular with riders, he said, that some persons refuse to board the leased Greyhound buses even though seats are available. They prefer to stand aboard the new buses, he said.

Golden Gate Bridge District Board Also:

ADVERTISING — Received a report from public relations consultant Gerald S. Noble that $49,182 of the $80,000 budgeted to promote the new bus system had been spent in the six months ending Dec. 31.

STOP — Received a report from Dist. Engineer Robert E. Shields that the financial district bus stop in San Francisco had been extended all the way along Sansome Street to California Street thanks to the "overwhelming support of everyone on the city staff."

LARKSPUR — Endorsed a request by the City of Larkspur for state and federal aid toward its $380,000 project to widen East Sir Francis Drake Boulevard to four lanes to serve the district's ferry terminal site at the mouth of Corte Madera Creek.

RUDDER — Received a report from Luehring that replacement of the rudders on the Sausalito ferry, knocked off last month when it struck an unidentified object, cost $6,902.

WASHER — Authorized bidding for a bus-washing machine at a cost of up to $20,000. An "economy model," it will be transferred to the Santa Rosa bus facility after a larger model is installed at the permanent San Rafael facility.

HOVERCRAFT — Deferred payment of a $19,663 bill from British Hovercraft Corp. for tank testing of hull models of the district's proposed new ferryboats. Several directors balked because the district's consulting naval architect, Philip Spaulding, had estimated the cost at only $10,000.

DEPOTS — Referred to the finance committee, for its Jan. 27 meeting at 9 a.m. in toll plaza offices, a plea by Marin bus depot operators for an increase in their 5 per cent commission on sale of district bus tickets.

DIRECTOR — Received notice that newly elected San Francisco Supervisor John Molinari has been appointed to the bridge board by his fellow supervisors to replace James Mailliard, who did not seek reelection. Molinari was absent.

TRAFFIC — Received report from Luehring that 15,736 commuters drove across the bridge yesterday between 6 and 9 a.m., down from the average of about 17,000 counted before the new bus system started.

SHELTERS — Received report from Jenkins that Marin County will get the entire local share of the sales tax on the bus fleet because the majority of bus operations are within the county. Marin County Supervisor Michael Wornum pledged that the $60,000 will be earmarked to build bus shelters.

UNION — Formally recognized the Amalgamated Transit Union as representing the district's bus drivers.

ROPES — Awarded a $2.8 million contract to Allied Structural Steel Co. of Hammond, Ind., to replace suspender ropes and floor beams on the span, and referred to committee a proposal by Ammann and Whitney, New York engineering consultants, to oversee the work for $272,000.

PARKING — Awarded a $4,950 contract to Lewis M. Merlo Inc. of San Francisco to pave the employees' parking lot.

SAUSALITO — Referred to committee a resolution proposed by San Francisco Supervisor Robert Gonzales to locate the district's major Sausalito ferry terminal in the central waterfront area between Locust and Litho streets, ignoring city recommendations that it be in the downtown area. Also sent to committee was a separate Gonzales resolution agreeing to share the district's Sausalito landing with Harbor Carriers, which already is suing the city over its refusal to allow the company's ferries to land in Sausalito.

SECRETARY — Promoted the district's secretary pro tem, Peter Clainos, to district secretary, replacing Helen Jack, who retired. His salary will continue at $17,112 a year.

MEETING — Set a meeting of the building and operating committee at 10 a.m. on Wednesday in toll plaza offices.

BIKE PATH — Received staff report that paving of the bicycle path from the bridge to Conzelman Road in Fort Baker has been completed.

CLUB BUS — Renewed for an additional year the district's subsidy to Community Enterprises Inc. for three charter buses serving commuters up to Petaluma, the subsidy averaging about half of the contract limit of $500 per bus per month.

SIGNS — Awarded a $9,605 contract to Hawkins-Hawkins Co. of Berkeley to furnish 500 bus stop signs and poles.

VACATION — Granted Luehring two weeks of vacation, starting yesterday.

POWERHOUSE — Awarded an $83,500 contract to American Contract of San Francisco for powerhouse improvements. Engineer Shields had estimated the cost at $91,000.

TELEPHONES — Received report from Luehring that two telephones were being added to the four in San Rafael already jammed with calls about the new bus system.

Petaluma To Again Study Bay Ties

Petaluma City Council again will tackle the issue of which — if any — regional governmental alliance Sonoma County should belong to, at the council's meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

Councilman Robert A. Brunner is expected to ask the council to support Sonoma County Supervisor Philip L. Joerger's appeal for a rehearing before the state Council on Intergovernmental Relations. That agency last month denied Sonoma County's proposal to quit the Association of Bay Area Governments and to help form a new alliance of north coastal counties and cities.

Mayor Helen Putnam will present a counterproposal that the city adopt a resolution calling for a plebiscite before joining any regional government grouping.

Last April, Sonoma County residents voted to pull out of ABAG and form the north county alliance. Mrs. Putnam has declared the voters were misled on the issue.

Big Deficit Is Forecast By Auditor

A $21 million deficit for the Golden Gate Bridge District next fiscal year, consuming virtually its entire existing cash reserve, was predicted yesterday by its auditor, Gordon E. Dahlgren.

The biggest expense for the year will be an estimated $15,173,000 to build most of the proposed ferry system, a cost that other district officials predict will be offset by a $12.3 million federal grant.

The annual deficit will drop to $4,460,000 by fiscal 1975-76, he estimated.

Dahlgren, in a five-year projection of estimated revenues and expenditures, figured that the annual operational deficits for bus and ferry operations will total $6 million by fiscal 1975-76. Of this, $4.1 million will be for the bus system, and $1.9 million for the ferry system, he estimated.

His list of expenditures included a host of projects either planned or already begun, including replacement of suspender ropes, bridge repairs, toll plaza modernization and a suicide barrier.

Dahlgren's report was received by bridge directors without comment, and was referred to the finance committee for a special review at 9 a.m. on Jan. 27 in toll plaza offices.

Pet Hanging Case May Be Solved

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Police said Friday a 16-year-old girl has been implicated in the mysterious case of four household pets found hanged from tree limbs in a quiet residential neighborhood.

Police said they have not yet been able to question the girl because she is in a hospital under observation. But Lt. Glen De'Amicis said she is definitely involved "one way or another."

Police said they were tipped by an informant that the girl was involved, and she was implicated through handwriting in a note left at the scene of one of the pet hangings.

The pets, two dogs and two cats, were all found hanging from trees within the past two weeks. A note found at one of the sites warned that people would be the next victims.

De'Amicis said the girl is a daughter of a San Francisco businessman and has sisters and brothers. There are two pets, a dog and a cat, in her home.

After they are able to question the girl, police said they would determine whether juvenile court action should be taken.

Court Date Is Set On Charges

Anita Elizabeth Lagercrantz, 22, of Mill Valley, was arraigned yesterday in Marin Municipal Court on misdemeanor charges of resisting arrest and battery.

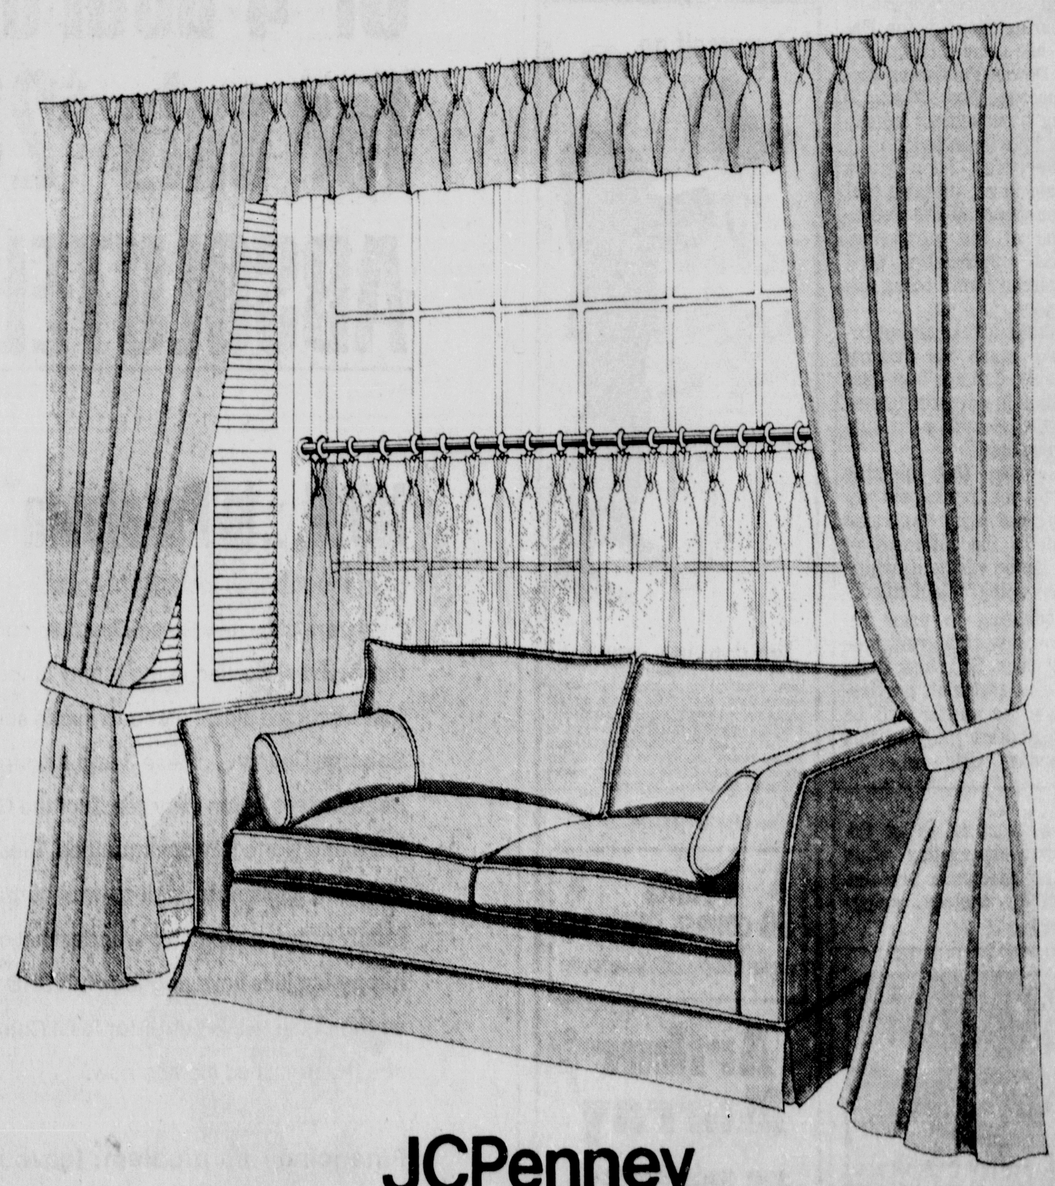

She is to plead to the charges next Friday.

Mrs. Lagercrantz was arrested last Saturday on suspicion of felony battery on a Sausalito police officer who made a routine traffic stop on a car in which she was a passenger.

HOW MANY PIES TO A LEMON?

Mrs. Raymond Ferrari picks grapefruit-sized lemons from a tree in the backyard of her home at 275 Johnstone Drive, Marinwood. The tree, which bears the year around and seems to be hardy against the current frosts, provides the family with premium quality materials for pies, lemonade and other uses, she said yesterday.

Break In Aid To State's Poor

SACRAMENTO (UPI) —Gov. Ronald Reagan has announced a "bold new experiment" in cooperation with his old foe, California Rural Legal Assistance, to improve legal services for the state's poor.

Reagan said Friday that eventually the project will receive a grant of $2.5 million from the federal Office of Economic Opportunity. The initial planning stages of the program will be funded by a $150,000 grant which will come out of the $2.5 million.

The project was considered part of a compromise agreement between the Nixon and the Reagan Administrations concerning CRLA, which Reagan has severely criticized for allegedly failing to help the poor and for supposedly becoming involved in politics.

The governor, late in 1970, vetoed a $1.8 million grant to CRLA. However, last July the compromise, including a $2.65 million grant to the legal agency was announced. One condition of it was that CRLA participate in the program.

Reagan said, "I am confident that this bold, new experiment can result in significantly improving the quality and availability of professional legal services to the poor in California."

Cruz Reynoso, executive director of the CRLA, expressed some reservations about Reagan's announcement, but added, "CRLA will actively cooperate with the state OEO, national bar nd Mexican bar associations and the entire legal community" on the program.

He said he was "disappointed" that the $150,000 grant did not go to a single, nonprofit corporation which "would be representative of the poor and the legal community."

Reynoso also said he will make "every effort" to see that the poor are included in the planning stages.

Noticeably absent from Reagan's announcement was any mention of CRLA.

State OEO Director Robert B. Hawkins said the program would "not necessarily" replace CRLA, adding, "we see CRLA actively involved in the planning phase of this."

In a joint statement with Phil Sanchez, head of the federal OEO, Hawkins said, "in the broadest sense we wish to learn whether there are effective and efficient ways to provide legal services to the poor beyond the traditional OEO-funded legal services programs as they are now constituted."

Brandt Jet In A Near Collision

WASHINGTON (UPI) —An air traffic controllers union says an Eastern Airlines jetliner had to take sharp evasive action Thursday to avoid colliding with the plane returning West German Chancellor Willy Brandt home from Florida after his meeting with President Nixon.

A spokesman for Eastern gave a different version, saying that although the two planes wound up near each other at the same altitude, "it was not a panic, emergency situation at all.

An official of the Federal Aviation Administration said the separation between the aircraft was "at least two miles," whereas the spokesman for the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization (PATCO) said the planes came within 500 feet of each other after breaking out of clouds at 33,00 feet.

Journal Is Victor In Hughes Book

NEW YORK (UPI)—A state Supreme Court justice today vacated his own order which had temporarily barred publication of excerpts of a biography of billionaire recluse Howard Hughes in the February issue of the Ladies Home Journal.

Justice Samuel M. Gold ruled in favor of arguments by the magazine's attorneys, Eric M. Javits and George R. Hincley, that the temporary restraining order he signed Friday violated constitutional guarantees against censorship before publication.

Rosemont Enterprises Inc., which claims Hughes granted it "exclusive rights" to his autobiography in exchange for $10 in 1965, had sought to block book and magazine publication of the biography written by Robert P. Eaton.

But Gold ruled today that the order was "an unconstitutional prior restraint on freedom of the press." The February issue of the Ladies Home Journal goes on the newsstands Tuesday.

In issuing the order Friday Gold had scheduled a show cause hearing Monday for Eaton and his codefendants, the Journal, Downe Publishing Inc. and Hippocrene Books, Inc., to show why a permanent injunction should not be issued.

Journal editor John Mack Carter said in an affidavit that 3.5 million copies of the February issue of the magazine, which has a circulation of 7 million, already were being distributed.

Carter said a restraining order would cause the Journal "irreparable damage"—a loss of $3 million in advertising revenues and $1.4 million in subscriber revenues.

"I'm satisfied that the stay granted by me represents unconstitutional prior restraint and that in the interests of justice I should vacate it, which I'm hereby doing," Gold ruled.

"My adhering to prior restraint would work a great mischief and harm. So I think there should be no restraint, particularly since the matter will be heard by another judge of this court Monday," Gold said.

Contract On Sewer Project On Agenda

Awarding of a contract for the second phase of San Rafael's sewer reconstruction project will be among items considered by the San Rafael City Council at an 8 p.m. meeting Monday at city hall.

There may be complications, however, as the firm which submitted the low bid, opened yesterday, has asked that its bid be withdrawn.

Norris M. Rawles, director of public works, reported J and H Construction Company of Hayward said it made a $90,000 mistake in preparation of its $587,255 bid.

Rawles said the bid was about $100,000 below engineers' estimates for the project, reconstruction in the east downtown and San Rafael High School area.

Eight other bids were received, he said.

Plea Set On Battery Charge

Only a misdemeanor charge of battery was filed yesterday against a Santa Venetia man arrested Thursday on suspicion of assault with a deadly weapon.

Levester Kilgore, 40, was arraigned in Marin Municipal Court on the charge yesterday. He is to enter a plea Friday.

Kilgore is accused of beating Lillian Knott, 36, also of Santa Venetia, after he became angry while the two were driving on North San Pedro Road. Mrs. Knott was hospitalized with multiple scrapes, bruises and cuts and a possible head injury.

ART REVIEW

Mill Valley Show Better Than Usual

By LAURA DEVENDORF

January hardly seems to qualify as autumn. Nonetheless, the juried section of the Mill Valley Fall Arts Festival is being held this month to take advantage of space in the new Genesis Gallery at 2 Miller Avenue.

In the past, as the festival moved around town, the juried section was housed in a variety of places. It has used a circle of redwoods in Old Mill Park, the City's library gallery and a tennis court in Boyle Park. It always found somewhere to go, making the Mill Valley festival the only one which traditionally had this interesting special section in addition to the free-for-all of panels open to all artists and craftsmen.

While the Fall Arts Festival title makes little sense, the juried show certainly doesn't suffer from the Genesis setting. The gallery's many layers and levels for viewing, as well as its nooks and alcoves, all make individual works seem to have their own private, personal environment. And it helps to make this basically good show look better.

About a third of it seems made up of the winners. In graphics: First, Kevin Elston; second, Nelcy Tarics; third, Anne Wienholt; honorable mention, Renny Renard. In painting: First, James Weeks; second, Connie Spaan; third, Bettyjo Norton; honorable mention, Barbara Williams.

In crafts; First, Daniel Zolinsky; second, Theodora Elston; third, Sandra Schindler. In sculpture: First, Nelcy Tarics; second, F. Carl Dern; third, Samm Hawley honorable mention, Phillip Dizick. And judges special recognition was awarded to Robert Hernandez.

The graphics and sculpture winners are especially strong. Ideas as diverse as the complex circuits and spheres of Miss Taric's embossed print, "Fresh Air Machine," and the sketchbook casualness of Miss Wienholt's drawing of "Mrs. Tew."

Sculpture comes as gleamingly metallic as Miss Taric's polished, undulating "Tidepool," and as personalized as the fanciful machine Dern blends from metal, wood, glass and rope.

Paintings span many looks from the darkened realism of antique California oils to distortions that hint of repainted photographic blowups. Crafts include ceramics and weaving that are as utilitarian as a flower-covered bag for paints or as just-for-looking as a painting in yarn of layered fields and hills at sunrise.

As Mill Valley Fall Arts Festival juried shows go, this is one of the better ones. It looks especially good where it is. But it was also a welcome feature that was looked forward to at festival time. It can only be hoped that the severance of the juried section from all festival activity won't be forever.

More Time Asked To Study Plan

The San Rafael Parks and Recreation Commission has decided it needs more time to study a proposal by the Northwood Bowman's Association to lease city-owned property in Victor Jones Park in the Glenwood area for an archery range.

After considerable discussion Thursday, the commission asked Harold Mayfield, president of the archery group, to prepare an aerial study of an ideal archery range and meet with Parks and Recreation Director Andrew J. Snyder to study the matter further.

Mayfield told the commission the archers want to lease about 12 acres for the range and said it could be a city-owned facility, open to the public.

In other business, the commission asked Snyder to prepare a report on the feasibility of the city's obtaining the former Nike site adjacent to Black Canyon for use as a recreational area.

Smallpox Areas

GENEVA (UPI) — Smallpox has been all but eradicated everywhere except in Ethiopia and the Sudan, the World Health Organization (WHO) said Friday.

Bill Aimed At Tip Protection

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Assemblyman Leroy F. Greene, D-Sacramento, has introduced legislation designed to prevent an employer from taking tips received by his waitresses.

"When I give a tip for exceptional service," Greene said, "I intend the tip to go to that person and not to be used by the employer to reduce the salary he pays the employe. If I had wanted to give the management a tip, I would have."

The measure would make a tip the sole property of the persons receiving it. Greene noted state law allows an employer to credit part of a tip against the wages paid to a waiter, waitress or any person receiving a gratuity for service.

Two Firemen Die As Wall Collapses

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI)— The brick wall of a burning surplus store collapsed on a fire truck early today, killing two firemen and injuring six others. "They really didn't have a chance to get away," Fire Chief Jack Davis said.

Both firemen were dead on arrival at a Little Rock Hospital. Davis said the injured firemen had sustained numerous broken bones.

MARJORIE CASEBIER

Actress To Give Benefit On Friday

Marjorie Casebier, an actress who formerly performed with the defunct Festival Theater, will present a benefit performance for the Ross Psychiatric Center at 8:30 p.m. Friday in the College of Marin Fine Arts Theater.

Miss Casebier, in a program entitled "Six Characters Plus Me," will portray six different characters chosen from among the 34 productions she appeared in with Festival Theater. She will use a minimum of props in her portrayal of characters ranging from a little girl to a New Orleans spinster, a Bronx coed and a Chaplinesque magician.

Between changes of costume, Miss Casebier will talk informally about her acting experiences.

Ban Witnesses

SINGAPORE (UPI)—The Singapore government, which is in the process of raising a citizen's army, has banned the Jehovah's Witnesses and ordered its branch leader expelled because of the group's antimilitary, antigovernment beliefs.

Third Coast Guard School Is Operating

The last of three schools planned at present at the Coast Guard Training Center near Petaluma has begun operation.

Ensign Charles Averill, information officer at the Two Rock base, said a radioman's school opened this week, joining commissary and storekeeper schools opened earlier.

A total of 225 students are now assigned to the center, with 455 expected by the time the radio school is in full operation in the spring.

A 300-man barracks is to be built at that time, and the center's mess hall will be expanded to accomodate 600 men.

Averill said more training schools may be opened at the center in the future.

The Coast Guard took over the Two Rock base last summer when the Army abandoned the facility in a Defense Department economy move.

More Pressure

CUMBERLAND, Md. (UPI) —Back tires on rear-engine automobiles need more air pressure than the front tires, advise engineers for a tire manufacturer. A rear-engine automobile operating with equal pressure in all four tires could produce less than a satisfactory handling performance, they report.

No Comment On Resignation Of Stans

WASHINGTON (UPI)—White House spokesmen have declined comment on reports that Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans will leave the cabinet within a week to 10 days.

Both the Washington Post and Washington Evening Star reported that Stans will resign and be succeeded by Peter G. (Pete) Peterson, 45, the White House coordinator on foreign economic policy and a former president of Bell & Howell.

Optimism For Apollo Missions

SPACE CENTER, Houston (UPI)—Geologists expect the final two Apollo expeditions this year to produce more scientific information about the moon than the volumes of data returned from the first four lunar landings.

"We're only halfway in our experimentation," Dr. William Muehlberger said at a meeting late Thursday winding up the third annual Lunar Science Conference.

Muehlberger, chief geologist for Apollo 16, said last summer's Apollo 15 moon flight matched the scientific output of Apollos 11, 12, and 14. "And we have two more coming, each of which has more extensive plans than Apollo 15."

THE FASHION SCENE

Norell Endorses Colors

by PATRICIA MC CORMACK

NEW YORK (UPI)—Norman Norell, last of the pace-setting American designers to show a spring collection, yesterday showed he endorsed the red, white and blue color schemes drummed in earlier by other designers.

But he parted from the ranks with the introduction of maxi-puff or balloon sleeves on white organza blouses with huge self-bows at the neck. The sleeves seemed at least a foot wide and were cinched at the wrist. They made the models seem to be encircled in a puff of cloud.

The floating tops were worn with skinny pants that looked as though they were made of molten gold and silver.

Norell, who won the first Coty award for distinguished designing in 1943, favored the finger-tip jacket suit for daytime, with collars and without.

His red, white and blue color combinations were most often via plaids, from tiny tablecloth squares to three-inch squares in red and white, in blue and white, sometimes in the tri colors. For evening he showed the same combinations in ankle-length.

What was surprising: many pant suits in the collection, at a time when the garment industry seems to be de-emphasizing them. Norell's pantsuits had widened legs. Many were in white and almost always they were worn with spectator pumps. Sometimes they were shown with Panama fedoras with four inch brims, brims turned down.

His coat silhouettes ranged from the navy officer tailored type to a widened, oval nearly cape-shaped coat that disguised the anatomy of the wearer. To wear the tailored ones, a lean shape is best.

SOME OF the nautical looking costumes had white eagles and red chevrons embroidered on them. One navy dress had this embroidered like a breast-plate on the bodice.

For evening, Norell prefers plenty of shimmer via dresses paved with sequins or made of that metallic looking fabric seen earlier in the pants with maxi-puff sleeves. He ended his show with a long gold and a long silver dress, long sleeves, high neck. Norell's prices range from around $350 to $2,500 or $3,000.

Humorist Wins His Audience

By BARBARA HOSMER

"I'm new at this lecture racket . . . My wife would have come but she's afraid to fly. She always says, 'If God had wanted us to fly, he would have given us tickets'."

With such remarks, humorist Goodman Ace eased his way into his appearance yesterday morning on the A.M. lecture series at the Marin Veterans Memorial Building, briefly reviving echoes of the humor he provided in the years now known as the Golden Age of Radio.

As a comedy writer for radio and television personalities such as Uncle Miltie, Tallulah and Phil Silvers, Ace and his style of joke pre-dated most of his Marin County audience, but the gags kept them chuckling through most of the hour.

He offered a quick formual for peace: "The North Vietnamese love Paris, going to the Folies Bergere and Maxim's at night. They don't want to go home. If you moved the Paris talks to Provo, Utah, you'd have peace . . ."

He threw in a creakingly old moron joke and another wife-joke (She's the only woman I know who wrote a letter with a P.S. that said 'Guess who died?')

Then the doctor-joke: "My doctor is a great fellow but he told me I'm overweight. I said, 'I'm the right weight for a man six foot nine — It's not my weight but my height you've got to do something about."

THE ACE humor has come steadily across "that air pollution known as TV", as he terms it, and Ace said that most of the TV celebrities and actors he has written jokes for complained continually that "they won't get it" — the public that is.

"I tell them, well, you got it, didn't you?" he said. "The celebrities, who shall be nameless, think you won't understand the jokes. One who shall be nameless — Perry nameless — would do only about three minutes of jokes — he reads them off cue cards — because he couldn't remember them. Finally, after three months we dropped the top line, 'Good evening and welcome to the show'."

One time, he said, they were in Rome for about a week taping a Christmas show with the Sistine Chapel choir. The whole time Perry worried and fretted that he wanted to give a gift to the Sistine choir.

"At the end of the week he was still worrying about what that he could give, and finally

The Carpenter's A Seamster

KANSAS CITY — Edward L. Hoegler, carpenter by trade and a husky 195-pounder, has many interests: his work, his family, his hound dogs, hunting, fishing . . . and sewing.

When his daughter Michelle was married, guests asked who made her bridal gown. The answer was, "Daddy did it."

"Sewing is relaxing and your mind is different when you sew," Hoegler said. "Being a leisure-time seamster in a carpenter's world" is enough to make the man cautious. "The guys I work with don't know about my hobby." (Los Angeles Times Syndicate)

A Pitch For Women Stockbrokers

By LIZ LAGUE
Capitol News Service

SACRAMENTO — "I would like to see more women get involved in investments," said Peggy J. Larson, stockbroker with duPont Glore Florgan, Inc., in Sacramento.

"Women tend to defer money decisions to men, saying 'I'm not good at figures,' and thinking it's dull."

One of five women stockbrokers in the Northwest Region of her firm (out of 400), Mrs. Larson proclaims "I'm not trying to be a feminist — just trying to do a job. I don't encounter any prejudice — if it's there it's well hidden."

However, she does admit to a telephone handicap. A wife or secretary answering the phone sometimes doesn't expect a woman stockbroker and may hold up the call, yet put it through immediately for one of Mrs. Larson's male colleague.

Mrs. Larson is always happy to speak to anyone about the market, but especially to women's groups.

After all, she explained, "Women own 50 per cent of all stock, 40 per cent of all homes, 50 per cent of all mutual funds and have 65 per cent of all the savings accounts."

She says inheritance accounts for much of these high percentages but, "Career women invest more on their own now than in the past. As mature adults they're involved in buying things anyway — women buy more food, cars, homes and invest more in education than men."

How does a woman become a stockbroker?

"The biggest problem is to get a branch manager to make a recommendation to the main office.

"Anyone interested must make an appointment to see a manager to talk about being a stockbroker. It must be someone who has interest and willingness to put in long, long hours.

General requirements are a college degree, a few years business experience and a desire for sales. Most firms' training programs take six months of concentrated study.

Mrs. Larsen has been a licensed stockbroker for 19 years.

"Like most women, I started out as a secretary and was encouraged to become a stockbroker by one of the managers," she said.

"It's a highly regulated industry," she added, "working with people's money is always a very difficult thing to do.

"But, it's not dull. Everyone is a potential client — everyone wants to make money, to do a little gambling or security investment. It's very exciting."

The Fur Hat Making A Return On Men's Winter Fashion Scene

NEW YORK (UPI) —The fur hat season is back, and if a man wants to look citified he wears a tall Cossack type hat shaped something like a flattened fez. If he wants to look countryfied he wears a shorter one with turned up cuff. If he doesn't care, there are hats with flaps like those of a motorcycle cop.

If he wants to look elegantly citified he wears a pearl fur Cossack type hat and pays anywhere from $15 to $100 depending on whether he is wearing rabbit or mink. And if he doesn't want to look that elegant there are artificial fur hats for $6 to $12, which outsell the real ones four to one.

More people want to look countryfied than citified, apparently, because the hats with turned up cuffs make up about 75 per cent of sales and the taller Cossack type hat only 20 per cent. The other 5 per cent wears those hats with earflaps which tie across the top of the head and have a turn-up fore and aft.

THE MOST popular fake fur is mouton, which, if genuine, would be a sheared sheepskin that is often dyed to resemble something more expensive, like beaver. Next is Persian lamb which used to be called astrakhan before the furriers got into a fight over what was real astrakhan and what was not.

In genuine furs the best sellers are mouton, rabbit, Persian lamb, pin seal and beaver.

A few years ago the only fur hats sold were black or dark brown with an occasional gray but now they, also come in white, taupe and combinations —such as a brown Persian lamb crown with a cuff made of some contrasting fur such as mouton or beaver.

This dissertation on fur hats was prompted by an improbable sight at the Westport, Conn., railway station — two dazzlingly beautiful girls done up in furs like a couple of Eskimos and selling fur hats from an old fashioned red sleigh, right on the station platform. They moved insider the station when the temperatures dropped into the 20s.

INVESTIGATION SHOWED this to be another brainchild of Charles H. Salesky, president of the Hat Corporation of America, or more properly, the brainchild of Alfred Katz who is president of the hat division of the corporation.

"You always have more lookers than buyers," Salesky said of the new venture which he refers to as "outpost selling." "But the lookers of today are the buyers of tomorrow. Right now a lot of the bareheaded commuters are rushing over to buy fur hats on the spot."

Salesky, working with Wallach's, a New York men's store with a number of suburban shops, installed the sleighs at the Westport and Stamford, Conn., stations for the month of December to see if the sales of fur hats would soar. He predicts "by next year there'll be a thousand stations across the country." And, according to Katz, such schemes could spread everywhere, including Chicago's O'Hare airport.

"CREATIVENESS WILL triumph," Salesky said. "People who are creative will do well. Tradition is the thief of imagination and slaves of tradition won't do well. I say 1969 was the year of the suit, 1970 the year of the shirt, 1971 the year of the tie and 1972 will be the year of the hat. It's creative merchandising and that's why you saw those girls selling fur hats in Westport."

THE GENERATION RAP

by Helen and Sue Bottel

Reader Shares His Own Poem With Helen And Sue Bottel

DEAR RAP:

Thought your readers would like this as much as I did. — ANOTHER READER

(The following was written by Kenneth Ross, who, at the time of the writing, was a high school student in Upper Moreland, Pa.)

In the end,
There was Earth, and it was with form and beauty.
And man dwelt upon the lands of the Earth, the meadows and trees, and he said,
"Let us build our dwellings in this place of beauty."
And he built cities and covered the Earth with concrete and steel.
And the meadows were gone
And man said, "It is good."

On the second day, man looked upon the waters of the Earth.
And man said, "Let us put our wastes in the waters of the Earth and the dirt will be washed away." And man did.
And the waters became polluted and foul in the smell.
And man said, "It is good."

On the third day, man looked upon the forests of the Earth and saw they were beautiful.
And man said, "Let us cut the timber for our homes and grind the wood for our use." And man did. And the lands became barren and the trees were gone.
And man said, "It is good."

On the fourth day, man saw that animals were in abundance and ran in the fields and played in the sun. And man said, "Let us cage these animals for our amusement and kill them for our sport."

And man did. And there were no more animals on the face of the Earth. And man said, "It is good."

On the fifth day, man breathed the air of the Earth. And man said, "Let us dispose of our wastes into the air for the winds shall blow them away. And man did. And the air became filled with the smoke and the fumes could not be blown away.

And the air became heavy with dust and choked and burned. And man said, "It is good."

On the sixth day, man saw himself; and seeing the many languages and tongues, he feared and hated. And man said, "Let us build great machines and destroy these lest they destroy us." And man built great machines and the Earth was fired with rage of great wars. And man said, "It is good."

On the seventh day man rested from his labors and the Earth was still for man no longer dwelt upon the Earth.

And it was good.

Nothing Like Lovely Piece Of Wool

BY EUNICE FARMER

DEAR EUNICE,

I just completed a beautiful plaid acrylic coat that was bonded. I am proud of the workmanship but not of the way the coat hangs. The only clue I have is that the material was terribly off-grain. Would it help to take the coat apart and try to straighten the grain of the fabric?

Perhaps a tailor could steam out the fabric and stretch it into the proper shape. I spent over $50 for the material, not to mention my time, and it's sickening to think that it will never be worn as it is. This experience has turned me against acrylics.

MRS. R. K.

DEAR MRS. R. K.,

There is some faint resemblance between a good acrylic and wool, but there all similarity ends. There is nothing like a lovely piece of wool when it comes to performance and appearance in a garment. I am happy to say that most leading manufacturers have gone back to wool for all kinds of coats, suits and jackets.

There is no way to straighten the grain on bonded fabrics. The fabric has been fused to the backing in a permanent-press technique, and if it's done unevenly, there is no hope for it. I am still a firm believer that bonded fabrics are definitely not for the home-sewer who wants perfection in her finished garment. Remember, you are taking your precious time and effort, and you deserve beautiful results that can only be accomplished through quality fabrics.

Bonded acrylics cannot be shaped or steamed by a professional tailor either, some people expect miracles when they take a miserable looking object to the professional pressers and expect miracles.

A last word of caution, when making your spring coats and suits, use a good quality wool or a good quality of blends that could include part cotton, part linen, part silk or part polyester, usually with a portion of wool. In this way, you get the advantage of the best qualities of each fabric. Wool is so porous, yet firm, that it can be worn in the warmest climates with comfort and is a perfect travel companion.

MRS. ROLAND Schwarzen, St. Charles, Mo., is this week's Tailor Trix pressing board winner for her sewing suggestion:

"To duplicate the look of buttonhole twist for decorative stitching on cottons or polyesters, machine stitch with two pieces of your single thread. Most sewing machines today have a gadget to place your second spool on. This is not only less expensive, but you can be sure the thread is compatible to your fabric and avoid needless problems."

DEAR EUNICE:

Several weeks ago you cautioned us about using buttonhole twist on washable garments. Now I'm upset as I have used contrasting buttonhole twist on a white cotton pant suit that I intend to wash. Please let me hear from you about this. Our local home economics teacher said she never heard of this and often uses twist on knit garments.

MRS. E. S.

DEAR MRS. E. S.:

Buttonhole twist is a wonderful old product and was not originally made to be used on clothing that was laundered. It is made of silk thread and very hot water could shrink as well as fade the thread onto your fabric. We must never forget that some products were developed before the fabrics of today, and although they can still be used successfully on many fabrics, they are not compatible to all of them.

You have one advantage when you do your own sewing. Take a piece of your pant suit fabric and machine stitch it with the same buttonhole twist you used for your decorative stitching. Machine launder your sample and you will see immediately what the results would be when you launder your pant suit. Don't panic, perhaps in your case, you won't have the problems I have cautioned you about.

In the future, it is wise to check all findings for your garment against the fabric for shrinkage and fading. We are living in a world of constant change and somehow marketing of new products doesn't happen as fast as their component parts.

DEAR EUNICE,

You are my last hope. I'm enclosing a sample from a very expensive knit suit. It was beautiful and fit perfectly when I bought it about two years ago, but since then the "secretary's spread" has taken over. I have thought of adding a contrasting panel on each side of the skirt but can't find the same fabric.

MRS. J. M.

DEAR MRS. J. M.,

You are probably searching for a fabric that will have the same name on it that appeared on the manufacturers tag on your garment. The names will not be the same, even if it is identical fabric because the manufacturers have a special code name and number that is different than that used for fabric designated for fabric shops.

If your garment is 100 per cent polyester or 100 per cent wool or whatever, you should be able to find a compatible fabric that looks similar. If you can't find the same fabric, I would suggest you consider a polyester banding, perhaps to be used at the center front of your skirt. Perhaps if the skirt has a seam on each side of the center front, you could rip open these seams and spread them slightly, adding the braid for the additional width.

Whenever you doctor up a ready-made garment, be sure to use the same trim in another place, such as edging the collars, cuffs, yoke or pockets. If you tie the trim together on the entire garment, it won't look so much like you have added it for any specific reason. There are worlds of attractive knit trims that combine beautifully with the solid fabrics. You could also use any of the lovely embroidered trims in cotton, but be sure to pre-shrink any cotton trim before application.

Most women love a garment more after they have made a change to it than they did before because now it is individual and different. All you need is a little courage and the help of an experienced fabric shop to guide you in the right direction.

Watch Those 'Resume Services'

NEW YORK (UPI)—A person out of work is an easy target for a "dream" job, particularly one in an exotic location.

The Better Business Bureau warns, however, that a resume service is not a job and that some agencies "feed on the dreams of the down-trodden by setting up resume mills which simply rewrite a person's resume. They have no mechanism for placing the person in the job described, if in fact it exists at all." BBB says before you do business with any resume service offering job placement, find out exactly what you are going to get for the fee you pay. And get it in writing.

HUMOR

his lawyer said, 'Why don't you offer to re-do the ceiling?' "

Ace knocked the grammar used on television as "appalling" and told how in one series he used a joke that read "between you and me". The television comedian kept delivering the line "between you and I" even though the cue card read correctly. Ace kept using the "you and I" form in upcoming jokes, and always it was delivered wrong.

"I gave up," Ace said, and similarly said that when comedians objected that "they won't get it" about his jokes, he just took them out.

TALLULAH BANKHEAD, though, was fun writing for during the last two years of radio shows, he said. "She had the character already and she never complained about his script jokes.

"When she didn't get a joke, she would herselfjoke to the audience, 'That's all right, dahlings, I just caught the last one,' " Ace said.

In contrast, Margaret Truman cut nearly every line he wrote for a dialogue between her and Phil Silvers, refusing to allow any connection between her and 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue ("They'll find out my address!") or with the President.

Ace then named some TV shows he doesn't watch, adding, "I don't go to movies much, either. I'm far-sighted and hard of hearing and have to keep running up and down the aisle . . ."

Reagan Quizzed On Women Jobs

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) —Gov. Ronald Reagan was asked by a newsman Thursday what he plans to do about the fact that only 8 per cent of his state commissioners are women.

"The first thing I'm going to do about it, thanks to you having to bring it up, is explain it to my wife when I get home," Reagan joked.

The governor added that "We very consciously try, and I think we've been very successful" in appointing women to state jobs. But he promised "We'll take a look. I hadn't figured out that percentage."

Grandmother Joins The Under 30 Group

NEW YORK (UPI) —Marion Rombauer Becker is a grandmother with youthful enthusiasm for subjects that turn on the under-30 generation: organic gardening, organically-grown foods, ecology and Women's Liberation.

Mrs. Becker, who is best known as the co-author of "The Joy of Cooking," talked of these controversial subjects in an interview here. She had come to New York from her southern Ohio home to promote a new book, "Wild Wealth," (BobbsMerrill) which she wrote with conservationist Paul Bigelow Sears and florist-botanist Frances Jones Poetker.

She favors natural instead of chemical fertilizers for gardening because "it's obvious we must do something about growing and waste. We must cherish the best of the old methods.

"MY GROWING experience has been happier with composting. You can use material on your place, you don't have to buy anything and you're recycling waste.

"I have almost a mystic feeling about organic foods. There are so many unknown factors."

Mrs. Becker deplored the food industry's tendency to choose products for their shelf life instead of freshness, flavor and nutritional value.

"Always, in any seed, there's a protein element that is removed in processing to prevent rancidity," she said, adding that the highly nutritious seeds removed from whole grains in making all purpose flour are then sold for bird seed.

The current edition of her cookbook, originally published privately by her mother, Irma Rombauer, still retains a guide to substituting coarsely ground whole grain flours for the bleached, all purpose variety.

The new book is a lavishly illustrated plea for conservation of natural resources. Mrs. Becker's section is about wildflower gardening with an ecological base.

BUT SHE'S also concerned about the current interest in gathering and eating wild plants, and about hippies in communes who grow their own produce.

"The trouble is, they don't know enough about soil or food preservation," she said. "A friend who went to a hippie wedding in Kentucky said they were covered with impetigo (a skin disease) and white with anemia. She said they'd grown potatoes but left them out because they didn't realize potatoes had to be stored in a cool dark place (to retain their nutritional value and quality)."

Mrs. Becker said commune people also don't realize that they need 25 to 30 per cent wooded area to preserve an ecological base while growing their own food.

She theorized that the Indians had no such problems in growing foods years ago because they were constantly on the move to different areas, so they didn't wear out soil (as modern growers can do if they plant the same things in the same fields year after year).

MRS. BECKER also saw dangers inherent in the current flower and food cult: insufficient or incorrect cooking or picking plants at the wrong stage of development.

LEVITT
If you have ever had your doubts about mobile homes . . . then now is the time to give yourself a treat! The new 1972 LEVITT is here . . . right on our sales lot! Even from the outside, you might think you are looking at an architecturally designed home for the hills of Mill Valley. The thick shake shingles on the roof, the 7/16" Rough-X exterior siding, huge front entry porch with expansive picture windows throughout makes you realize that this home is one to think about for your future. The moment you step into the tile floor entry and see the cathedral beam ceilings, wall to wall carpeting, drapes and rustic wall paneling . . . your mouth almost waters. The living room is massive with a separate formal dining room. The kitchen is modern in every respect . . . yet has that old world charm. There are two large bedrooms with a master bath off the master bedroom and of course, there is another bath for your convenience.

Rewrite Of Bolinas Plan To Be Made

The Marin County Planning Commission will begin work Monday on its promise to rewrite the Bolinas-Stinson Beach master plan to keep the area from becoming urbanized.

Area residents appeared 100-strong before the commission in November, to protest that the county's 1961-model master plan would lead to an ultimate population of 20,000 for the two communities, with two major shopping centers and a freeway.

The residents said they wanted no more than 5,000 population and no freeways nor shopping centers.

Both the junking of the 1961 plan and its replacement with new controls on lot size and use permits must be approved by the Board of Supervisors.

Before the planners Monday will be a draft of an ordinance making the minimum lot size in Bolinas and Stinson Beach 7,500 square feet in place of the present 5,600 square feet. Smaller lots would be permitted only if septic tank regulations could be fulfilled. Any development other than single-family housing also would require a use permit hearing.

Also on the planners' agenda Monday are the master plan for the Kaiser-Aetna townhouse development in Marinwood, an excavation permit on Black John Road north of Novato, and two Fairfax area rezonings.

Plea Set In Marijuana Case

Lazaro Domingo Jr., 36, of Tiburon, was arraigned yesterday in Marin Municipal Court on a misdemeanor charge of possessing marijuana.

He is to plead to the charge Friday.

Domingo was arrested Thursday by Tiburon sheriff's deputies, who said he had offered a marijuana brownie and cigarette to a 22-year-old female parking attendant.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

By DR. THEODORE R. VAN DELLEN

Keep That Head Covered Up To Prevent Body Heat Escape

Cover the head with a hat, or scarf in cold weather, especially when inactive. At 25 degrees Fahrenheit, a warmly clothed man can lose half the heat produced by his body if his head is uncovered. Three-quarters of the body heat escapes through the head when the temperature drops to 5 degrees Fahrenheit. This is important to know, because the body is our only source of heat production when standing outdoors in the cold.

EVEN IN FRIGID weather, it may not be necessary to protect the head when exercising or working outdoors. In these circumstances, the body generates more heat than it needs. Since little is lost through the garments, shoes, and gloves, the person may be more comfortable if he has an escape hatch, such as an uncovered cranium. Adding a moisturizer or an emollient cream to the face may help weatherproof the skin.

Perspiration is a continuous process. It increases on exertion and lessens during rest. Evaporation of perspiration is needed to assure maximum comfort, but windproof garments hinder the process. Many mariners continue to wear oilskins or the like to protect against cold sea water, spray, and rain: Slickers are wonderful for keeping dry, but if the person perspires he may get a "chill" after working hard. But this is better than being chilled to the bone by the cold ocean spray.

THE IDEAL outer garment for damp days is made of two layers of tightly woven fabrics. It resists water and is an effective windbreaker. The cloth is permeable to allow the escape of vapor from perspiration. It may also contain a quilted layer of insulation material made of down or plastic pile.

When all is said and done, however, the amount of clothing needed to keep comfortable depends on the type of activity rather than the outside temperature.

Questions on medical topics will be answered by mail if stamped, self-addressed envelope accompanies request to the Independent-Journal.

LOSS OF STRENGTH

A. M. writes: What causes loss of strength in the arms from elbows to fingers? I can't press, pinch, pull, or twist with my hands.

REPLY

Pressure on the nerves in the neck and a disorder of the nervous system are possibilities. Why not consult your physician? Many special tests, including X-rays and electromyographic studies, may be necessary to make the diagnosis.

HOW TO PLAY

WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

An Odd Kind Of Puzzle In Championship Action At Vegas

Try to solve an odd kind of bridge problem. You arrive at the Las Vegas Hilton after one day of play between the legendary Italian Blue Team and the Dallas Aces, current holders of the world championship. You study the results of the first day and come upon the hand in today's diagram, with the bidding, the opening lead and the result at the two tables of the match.

Opening lead -- ♡ A

AT BOTH TABLES

At both tables the contract was four spades, and the opening lead was the ace of hearts. One declarer went down, and the other made his contract. Why?

When South went down, West must have shifted to a club. East won with the ace of clubs and returned a trump. Even if South took the ace of spades and ruffed two hearts in dummy, he would get only nine tricks. Since South actually went down two, he must have tried the spade finesse. Back came a trump, and dummy could ruff only once.

But what happened at the other table? At the second trick West must have shifted to a low diamond instead of a club. Poor defense for a world champion.

CONVENIENT DROP

Against this defense declarer takes the ace of diamonds, ruffs a diamond, ruffs a heart in dummy, ruffs a diamond, ruffs another heart, ruffs another diamond and ruffs his last heart with dummy's last trump. Then he leads a club.

East can take the ace of clubs, but South gets in with the king of clubs to lead trumps. The king conveniently drops, and South is home.

I decided to write something scornful about that diamond shift at the second trick, but then I asked the players what actually happened. It's hard to believe.

VERY RED FACE

At the second trick West actually led the king of spades! This would have been brilliant if East had the ace of spades instead of the ace of clubs. In the actual hand, however, brilliant wasn't the right word for West's second lead.

I wouldn't dream of mentioning names, but Pietro Forquet had a very red face when this hand was over.

DAILY QUESTION

As dealer, you hold:
♠ - A Q 6 5 3 2
♥ - Q 5 4 2
♦ - J
♣ - K 10.
What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid one spade.

You have minimum values for an opening bid, but you would strain a point or two to open when you have 10 cards in the major suits.

Storm's Wrath

MANILA (UPI) —The Philippine National Food and Agriculture Council reported that more than 30 million pesos (about $5 million) worth of rice crops have been destroyed by four successive storms which lashed 23 provinces in October. The typhoons damaged 286,000 acres of ricelands, located mostly in the largest island of Luzon.

Reactor Feasible In 1985, Scientists Say

OAK RIDGE, Tenn. (UPI) — Atomic Energy Commission spokesmen predict that the liquid metal fast breeder reactor should become commercially feasible beginning about 1985.

Research here and at other AEC facilities is aimed at developing fuels for such reactors and a cooling system which will work in handling the fuel, plus ways of reducing radioactive wastes to near zero.

Saturn Crosses The Meridian Line

By SHERMAN WALKER

Beautiful Saturn is crossing the meridian line this week at 9 p.m. (standard time). The meridian is an imaginary line through the sky from North Pole to South Pole, and all stars and planets cross it in a 24-hour period, due to the rotation of the earth.

Saturn, with its wonderful rings, is the most beautiful object in the sky — and it is amusing to reflect that through all the ages before the invention of the telescope, the existence of the rings was never suspected.

This week's discussion will be limited to Saturn and its moons, leaving the rings for next week.

To locate Saturn in the sky, look along the meridian at 9 p.m. for an object of first-magnitude brightness that is three-fourths of the distance up from the southern to the overhead point.

Saturn was the most distant planet known to the ancients. Because its motion is so slow, taking almost 30 years to pass through the 12 figures of the zodiac, it is represented on charts by the symbol of a sickle, the insignia of Father Time.

Saturn's diameter is 71,000 miles at the equator, and it rotates in about 10 hours so the speed on its surface is terrific. It is a very light object, light enough to float on water. This may mean that it is a small, dense planet, covered to a considerable depth by a thick atmosphere which makes it seem larger than it really is.

A Plea For Keeping School Busing System

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Reversal of San Francisco's school busing order would "send 10,000 black school children back to ghetto schools," it was argued yesterday.

Art Brunwasser, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit that U.S. District Judge Stanley A. Weigel only ordered the San Francisco School Board to implement its own policy statements.

Weigel ordered the so-called "horseshoe plan" for busing elementary school children in San Francisco and the school board has appealed to the circuit court.

San Francisco City Atty. Thomas O'Connor argued that the district court had no right to "be a super board of education" and order the busing.

Deputy City Atty. George Krueger told the court there was "no constitutional duty to act to rectify innocently arrived at racial imbalance." He said the issue should have been left to the San Francisco school board.

Mrs. Willis D. Hannawalt, representing an organization called Concerned Parents, said that the evidence showed no gerrymandering of school districts to thwart integration.

The court also heard arguments from attorney Quentin Kopp appealing from a lower court denial of his motion to intervene. He said that the interests of his clients, members of the Chinese community, were not adequately represented by actions of the NAACP.

Costs Sliced On Credentials

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — By streamlining the processing of teacher credentials, the new Teacher Preparation and Licensieg Commission sjys it has effected a savings of $1 million.

The commission made the claim Thursday in its initial report to the Legislature which was submitted to Assemblyman Leo J. Ryan, D-Burlingame.

Ryan said the commission has reduced the time required to issue a teacher-applicant license from about 95 days to 10 working days and thus cut costs from $3 million to $2 million.

The commission was established during the 1970 legislative session to make teacher-licensing procedures more "flexible, responsive and simple."

Free Education

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI)— Legislation was introduced in the Ohio House Friday to grant a free education at any state university for any child of an Ohioan who was a prisoner of war or missing in action in Vietnam.

Prosecution Rests In Sickle Case

NEVADA CITY, Calif. (UPI) —The prosecution rested its case Friday after a survivor of the sickle slayings identified Clarence Otis Smith as the man who attacked him with a sickle-like knife in a Sierra foothill campground.

Smokers Addicts Who Need Help

LANSING, Mich. (UPI)— Cigarette smokers who say their "habit" can be kicked whenever they want to are actually addicts who need special help, the director of the state Public Health Department said Thursday.

"Like many addicts, the tobacco addict often deludes himself into believing his dependency is merely habit rather than genuine addiction," said Dr. Maurice Reizen in a statement on smoking for National Education Week.

"Some even insist they could easily give up smoking if they ever wanted to," he said. "They fail to realize that the very reason they don't want to give it up is because they don't want to admit to themselves that they are really hooked."

Nixon Working On Speech At Retreat

THURMONT, Md. (UPI)— President Nixon stayed at his Camp David retreat today, working on his State of the Union message which he will deliver to Congress Thursday.

Mrs. Nixon, their elder daughter, Tricia, and her husband, Edward Finch Cox, accompanied the President to the camp in Maryland's Catoctin Mountains.

Prayer for Mankind

O Thou kind Lord! Thou hast created all humanity from the same original parents. Thou has intended that all belong to the same household. In Thy Holy Presence they are Thy servants and all mankind are sheltered beneath Thy Tabernacle. All have gathered at Thy table of bounty and are radiant through the light of Thy providence. O God! Thou art kind to all, Thou hast provided for all, Thou dost shelter all, Thou dost confer life upon all. Thou has endowed all with talents and faculties; all are submerged in the ocean of Thy mercy. O Thou kind Lord! Unite all, let the religions agree, make the nations one so that they may be as one kind and as children of the same fatherland. May they associate in unity and concord. O God! Upraise the standard of the oneness of humankind. Oh God! Establish the Most Great Peace. Cement the hearts together, O God! O Thou kind Father, God! Exhilarate the hearts through the fragrance of Thy love; brighten the eyes through the light of Thy guidance; cheer the hearing with the melodies of Thy Word and shelter us in the cave of Thy providence. Thou art the Mighty and Powerful! Thou art the Forgiving and Thou art the One Who overlookest the short-comings of humankind.

San Rafael Snaps Redwood Winning String at 43

By PAUL CANE

The streak stops here.

San Rafael High School, led by the scoring of Doni Canfield, ascended the glass mountain without slipping last night, and snapped two Redwood winning binges with a 63-59 triumph.

The victory tied San Rafael with Tamalpais atop the Marin County Athletic League basketball standings with a 3-0 mark; it cut short Redwood's 43-game MCAL winning streak; and it thwarted the Giants' bid for an unprecedented undefeated season by ending Redwood's 1971-72 win string at 15.

"I had a dream last night," said victorious coach Mike Diaz afterward. "In my dream we won."

Unfortunately for the Giants, their nightmare was no dream. San Rafael led all the way, once by as much as 11 points, and the closest Redwood got thereafter was the final margin.

Canfield scored 21 to lead the Bulldogs, mostly on outside jumpers in key situations, and was flawless at the free throw line.

Redwood mentor Dick Hart said resignedly, "We were beaten at the line!" Redwood made only 45 per cent of its free throws, while San Rafael clicked on 68 per cent.

Although the Giants ended up with better than 40 per cent from the floor, they were missing badly from the outside against San Rafael's zone defense.

"We tried to really pressure (Redwood's guard Sam) Farb at the top of the key, play tight on (forward Tim) Hennessy at the baseline, and sag on (center Steve) McGee inside," said the excited Diaz.

So did the 15 other teams Redwood played this year. The only difference was San Rafael succeeded.

McGee was held to six points in the first half, while Farb was shut out. Hennessy and guard Rich Hagler kept Redwood in the game with 12 and seven before halftime respectively. McGee finished with 24 and Hennessy with 20.

"Everybody, oh, everybody did a great job for us," exalted Diaz. "Jerry Molinari did an excellent job quarterbacking our offensd, and he really hustled on defense."

Wayne Lechner picked off ten rebounds for San Rafael, as the Bulldogs' outboarded the Giants, 33-27.

Trailing 35-28 at the half, the Giants couldn't get untracked in a sloppy third quarter, and were behind by nine entering what was to be a hair-raising final period.

McGee, virtually thwarted thus far by the zone, suddenly went crazy from under the hoop and from outside, to lead a Redwood charge that kept the deficit within reach. He was ably matched by the Bulldog offense with Bill Lechner contributing nine second-half points, but when Hennessy hit for a pair with 3:21 left, Redwood trailed by only six.

Wayne Lechner scored on a jumper from outside and then-hit a free throw to make it nine agan, but McGee hit twice from outside to bring Redwood within five with 44 seconds to play.

Bill Lechner then converted a three-point play to ice it, although McGee and Bob Brown hit on last-second baskets for the Giants.

Ironically, the last defeat the Giants suffered in MCAL play

MARIN TARS TRAVEL TO SANTA ROSA

The College of Marin Tars, smarting from a key Camino Norte Conference loss Wednesday to the defending champions Contra Costa College, attempt to return to winning ways tonight when visiting Santa Rosa Junior College at 8 o'clock.

Marin, now 16-2, face a Bear Cub quintet bent on dashing all Tar hopes of bouncing back into the CNC race.

To prevent a second successive loss, the Tars will likely open with forwards Ed Herrnberger and Joe Casteel; center Roosevelt Green; and guards Joe DeMaestri and Joe Smith.

Water Polo: San Rafael Grabs Lead

Since undisputed first place was involved, San Rafael High School's water polo team added a few celebratory fireworks yesterday, defeating Tamalpais by a lopsided 21-8 count after leading at the end of three quarters, 20-1.

The victory gave the Bulldogs a 9-2 Marin County Athletic League record, half a game ahead of Terra Linda, which drew a bye. Also yesterday, Redwood overwhelmed Novato, 19-9. Thursday, San Marin had beaten Drake, 17-2.

Scott Dicker scored eight goals, Mike Kamler six and Gary Walraven four for San Rafael. All other starters except the goalie tallied. "We've improved tremendously since the beginning of the year," said coach Bill Ranney.

John Goepp scored six goals and Corky Hull five for Redwood, cancelling out a seven-goal performance by Novato's Jim Praul.

Terra Linda will get a chance to regain a share of the lead Tuesday at Drake. Redwood will be at Tamalpais and San Marin ao Novato. San Rafael draws the bye. The league season is scheduled to conclude next Friday.

The standings:

San Rafael	9-2
Terra Linda	8-2
Redwood	6-4
Novato	6-4
San Marin	4-7
Tamalpais	3-7
Drake	0-10

San Marin J.V.s Nip Novato, 31-29

Mike Stublarec scored 11 points, including the clinching pair of free throws with 28 seconds left, as San Marin High School defeated Novato last night, 31-29, in a Marin County Athletic League junior varsity basketball game at San Marin.

Rich Mullin scored 18 for Terra Linda, but it wasn't enough, as Drake defeated the Trobabes behind Joey Wilkinson's 15 points, 55-46, at Terra Linda.

Novato Tops San Marin

By LEW CODDINGTON

Despite all the phrasemaking to the contrary, basketball is sometimes a very simple proposition: put the ball in the hoop. Novato High School did that part of the time last night, but San Marin did it rarely, and the result was a 63-52 victory for Novato.

Joe Robinson was the player who did it when it counted most. Beginning late in the third quarter, after San Marin had crept within two points, the 5-foot-11 guard scored eight points as Novato went on a 10-3 spree to lock up the game.

The victory at San Marin elevated Novato's Marin County Athletic League record to 1-2 and left the Mustangs the only winless team in the league at 0-3.

The Hornets shot around 50 per cent. That's a very admirable percentage from the field, where they sank 22 of 44. It's not such an admirable figure from the free throw line, where they hit 19 of 36.

In each case, however, Novato substantially outperformed San Marin, which made 35 per cent (20 of 57) from the floor and a mortifying 43 per cent (12 of 28) from the line.

Novato committed 21 fouls. However, San Marin committed 24 and was badly hampered in the fourth quarter when stars Hoza Wright, Marty Larsen and Greg Mazers were all trying to function with four fouls each.

San Marin's attempts to bounce back from Robinson's splurge were thwarted by the Mustangs' own cold shooting, which reached its low point early in the fourth period, when they made only one of their first 10 tries.

In fact, in the first 12 minutes of the second half, San Marin made only five of 19 shots from inside the key. After that, it didn't matter.

Marty Moroski scored 17 points for Novato. Stan Conte added 13, mostly on his hot first-

IN SUPER BOWL

Garrison Gets Starting Call

NEW ORLEANS (UPI)— Super Bowl coaches Don Shula of Miami and Tom Landry of Dallas engaged in a battle of wits today on the eve of the 6th annual Super Bowl and Duane Thomas again was the center of attraction.

Shula said the injury to Cowboy halfback Calvin Hill, rendering him unable to start, will put more pressure on Thomas. Thomas plays fullback when Hill starts, but the moody Thomas shifts to halfback when Walt Garrison replaces Hill.

GARRISON

Landry announced Friday that Garrison will start at fullback and Thomas will start at halfback, but Landry said Hill would play.

"This puts a burden on Thomas to prepare for both positions," Shula said after his afternoon conference.

Landry, aware all week of Hill's doubtful status for the biggest game in the history of the Texans, thinks he has solved this problem. He has worked Hill at fullback.

SIMPLIFIED

"To do it that way has simplified Thomas' preparation for the game," Landry said. "It means that Thomas has been able to concentrate only on playing halfback without having to split his preparation between halfback and fullback."

The only other personnel change made by either team was the Dglphins' activation of defensive tackle John Richardson. He replaces Charles Leigh, a running back with a shoulder separation.

The game will be at 1:30 p.m. CST Sunday in Tulane Stadium before a sellout crowd of more than 81,000 and will be televised nationally by CBS. The winning players receive $15,000 each and the losers $7,500.

LOSERS

Both Landry and Shula have lost their first two attempts in the Super Bowl — Landry last year to Baltimore 16-13 and Shula in 1969 when his highly favored Baltimore Colts were upset by the New York Jets 16-7.

How does Shula feel now with his five-point underdogs compared to 1969 with his Colts?

"With Baltimore, we were a team that had won 15 games and just came off a great 34-0 victory over Cleveland in the championship game," Shula said. "We came down here to finish a great season with a victory in the Super Bowl.

'YOUNG TEAM'

"This is a young team that has not been there yet," Shula said. "We're proud of our accomplishments, but we're hungry for this one. Whether we were overconfident before I don't know, but you got to give the Jets a lot of credit.

"It's really a different experience and there's not much parallel between them," Shula said.

Both he and Landry just want to come out with 1-1 records in the Super Bowl. But it isn't possible.

OLD VERSUS NEW

Mrs. King In Net Finals

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—A new face—Kerry Melville—and a familiar one—Billie Jean King—peer across the net at each other tonight in the singles final of the $17,000 British Motor Car pro tennis tournament.

Both vaulted into the finals of the first 1972 stop on the Virginia Slims tour with impressive victories before a packed gallery Friday night at the Civic Auditorium.

Mrs. King, 28, first woman athlete to win more than $100,000 in one year, broke fourth-seeded Virginia Wade's service in the fifth, seventh and ninth games to pull out a 6-4, 6-3 victory. Mrs. King needed 65 minutes to oust Miss Wade of Great Britain while holding service in the eighth game.

Miss Melville, the No. 6 seed from Australia, outhit and outran seventh-seeded Judy Dalton, also from Australia, 6-2, 6-4. Mrs. Dalton's backhand, which was superb when she upset second-seeded Rosemary Casals Thursday, deserted her in the semifinal match.

Mrs. King, the defending champion, and Miss Melville, ranked No. 8 in the world last year, will be battling for first prize of $3,400 in tonight's finale.

Miss Melville is usually a stranger to championship finals on the Virginia Slims circuit. However, she defeated Billie Jean last year en route to capturing the grass court championships at Newport, R. I., and also whipped Mrs. King in their last clash of 1971 at Auckland, New Zealand.

During 1971 Mrs. King defeated Kerry seven times. So the gal from Down Under will have lots of incentive in tonight's match.

Kollmyer Signs

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)— Lefthanded pitcher Ken Kollmyer, top pick by the San Francisco Giants in the recent free agent draft, has signed his 1972 contract. The 6-4, 195-pound student at San Diego City College will report to the Giants training camp in Casa Grande.

Warren Wells Put On Probation Again

OAKLAND (UPI)—A judge has ordered Warren Wells, former pass-catching sensation of the Oakland Raiders, freed from prison on condition he spend an indeterminate time in a rehabilitation center.

"Football is not the most important thing in the world," Alameda County Superior Judge Leonard Dieden told the 28-year-old wide receiver Friday. "The main thing for you to do is get your life straightened out."

Dieden formally sentenced Wells to prison Friday but suspended the sentence and ordered him to be on strict probation for three years and to enter Synanon, a rehabilitation organization for alcholics and drug addicts.

Wells won't be released from Synanon until officials there declare him rehabilitated to Dieden's satisfaction.

There are no bars at the Synanon House in Oakland, Dieden said, "but if you walk out of there you walk into state prison."

"You understand you may never play professional football again," he told Wells. "You understand you cannot walk out of the doors of Synanon without permisuion."

Dieden placed the football player on strict probation after noting that state prison officials recommended Wells would not benefit from further incarceration. He has been in jail and at a Sierra prison camp since Sept. 4 when his probation on an attempted rape charge was revoked after he was stabbed in a Beaumont, Tex., bar.

The judge also ordered Wells to refrain from liquor, have nothing to do with firearms and to sell his car.

In 1969 Dieden placed Wells on three years probation after he pleaded guilty to attempted rape. He was later ordered to undergo 60 days of psychiatric evaluation in Houston, Tex., after he was arrested for drunk driving, a hit-and-run incident and illegal possession of firearms.

While under the observation of Dr. J. B. Jones, a professor of psychology and guidance at Texas Southern University in Houston, Wells was stabbed in the Beaumont nightclub.

FOR CROWN

Frazier Meets Daniels

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — There's a whole bunch of big, rough, tough hombres from Dallas in town this weekend.

So while Bob Lilly, Jethro Pugh, Lee Roy Jordan and the other plug uglies of the Dallas cowboys are getting ready for Sunday's Super Bowl game against Miami, baby-faced Daniels is one of the most lopsided underdogs in the history of heavyweight championship bouts at 9 p.m. CST tonight against champion Joe Frazier.

It's Frazier's first time to the ring wars since he whipped Muhammad Ali last March 8, and the champion says he will "try to end the bout with the first punch, if I can."

Many people here think smokin' Joe can do exactly that, and they're harking back 15 years to the time when champion Floyd Patterson annihilated challenger Pete Rademacher, who was making his first-ever appearance as a professional, to find a heavyweight title fight that seemed more of a mismatch.

Daniels, a long-haired Ohioan who now lives in Dallas, will go into the ring armed with a punch that has earned him 25 knockout victories in a pro career of 29 wins, four defeats, and one draw — plus a huge helping of the hope that springs eternal and prompts men to do reckless things, like climb in a ring with Joe Frazier.

"There's a sign on the wall of the athletic dressing room in Southern Methodist University," said Daniels, who works out at SMU, "and the sign says, 'dreamers who work can make their dreams come true.'

"I believe it," says Daniels, the 25-year-old son of a Willoughby, Ohio, millionaire.

Meanwhile, there is the hard fact of Joe Frazier — who turned 28 years of age Thursday and has impressed obervers during his windup training here with his hard-as-nails condition. From ballooning to as much as 230 pounds after the Ali, Frazier was at 207 pounds as he neared the end of his work and planned to hit the scales for the weighin at around 205.

The fight, first heavyweight title fight in New Orleans since James J. Corbett took the title from John L. Sullivan in an upset on Sept. 7, 1892, will be scored round-by-round, no points, by three officials — the referee and two judges. There will be a mandatory eight-count on knockdowns, but no three-knockdown rule. If a fighter is floored at the end of a round, he will not be saved by the bell — the count will continue after the bell.

IN CROSBY

Nicklaus, Jacklin Tie

Nicklaus recovered from a near disastrous start in the second roudn at Spyglass Hill for a two-over 74 that left him in a flat-footed tie for the lead with Jacklin. Tony shot his second consecutive 70 at the same sand dune and seaside layout.

"Pebble Beach, in my opinion," said Nicklaus is one of the world's great courses and also one of my favorites. I can't ever remember playing a bad round there and I'm hopeful I can do better there than at Spyglass Hill."

Breaking par over the three Crosby courses this year has been difficult indeed for the field of 170 pros even through the first two rounds of the tournament have been blessed with near perfect weather.

Nicklaus and Jacklin are a 140 after 36 holes and Herb Hooper, a fourth-year pro from Richmond, Va., is a stroke back at 141 on rounds of 73-68. His 68 came at Spyglass and gave him a share of the course record with Johnny Miller, who also bagged a 68 in the second round.

Next, two strokes back at 143, were Lee Trevino, the 1971 PGA player of the year, Ted Hayes, Tom Weiskopf, Lanny Wadkins, Miller, Ralph Johnston, and Mike Morley, while Lou Graham and Al Geiberger were at even par 144.

Napa's Ron Cerrudo fired a 70 yesterday in carding a 146 after two rounds, six shots behind the co-leaders. Marin County Club pro Buddy Sullivan had a 79 yesterday enroute to compiling a 156 two-round total.

Thus, after two rounds of firing, only 10 men are under par which is close to an alltime record low at that point on the PGA tour. Last year in the Colonial National Invitation there were only five players under par after two rounds and in the 1971 Heritage Classic there were only six.

Pebble Beach, while a demanding course, can be scored on but this year it is playing tougher than in past years because they have narrowed the fairways and let the rough grow to get it ready for the U.S. Open in June.

Jacklin, who won $87,000 on the U.S. tour in 1970 and then slipped to only $19,000 in 1971 after curtailing his play, had five birds and three bogies on his second round card at Spyglass while Nicklaus had four

Warriors Notch 8th Win In Row

OAKLAND (UPI)—The Golden State Warriors will be going all out tonight to break their team record for consecutive wins since coming west from Philadelphia in 1962.

They tied the mark set by the 1967 powerhouse of eight straight with a gritty 115-111 win over New York Friday night at their second home in San Diego.

They can feel free to put a little extra mustard into tonight's effort against the Baltimore Bullets at the Oakland Coliseum Arena because— with one exception — they'll have a week off to recuperate.

Cazzie Russell is the lone Warrior who will play in Tuesday's NBA all-star tiff in Los Angeles.

That seems a small representation for a team with a 26-19 mark, one game back of Seattle in the NBA's Pacific Division.

In Friday's contest, one of six televised games this season using San Diego as the home court, the game was tied at 54-all at the half, but the Warriors built it up to 86-79 after three periods and then went on a 10-2 spree early in the last stanza with Nate Thurmond and Clyde Lee hitting the boards like tigers.

The Knicks went without injured stars Willis Reed and Earl Monroe in dropping their fifth in a row. This put Thurmond up against his old teammate Jerry Lucas, the guy the Warriors traded for Russell. Lucas is a fine forward but Thurmond scored 31 against him in the pivot.

And Monroe's absence allowed Jeff Mullins to roll. Despite an ice cold start, Mullins had 26.

Mullins says Thurmond should have been an allstar pick. Thurmond says Mullins should have been. Together, they have led the Warriors to their longest win streak since the days of Wilt Chamberlain and Rick Barry.

St. Louis Cards To Limit Pay Hikes

Strictly by the guidelines. That was the weekend announcement of the St. Louis Cardinals who said they will comply with the 5.5 per cent pay limit in all of their 1972 baseball contracts. It was an announcement that surprised other ball clubs, not to mention players.

The Chicago Cubs already have signed 15 players, including their pitching ace Ferguson Jenkins whose 1972 contract far exceeded the 5.5 per cent limit. Jenkins' new contract is a two-year agreement "in excess of $100,000" per year. The Cubs officially announced that Jenkins made substantially less than $100,000 last year.

The Cubs, like other clubs except the Cardinals, feel that wage and price guidelines are flexible enough to permit equitable pay increases for ball players who have merited them. There's no question about Jenkins having merited his increase. He led the National League with 24 wins last season.

IT WAS the fifth season in a row that Jenkins has been a 20-game winner, first Cub pitcher to do that since Mordecai Brown who did it 1906-11.

Perhaps the Cubs checked Chicago's Internal Revenue office and received assurance that IRS would not disallow Jenkins' pay raise or, at least, that portion in excess of the 5.5 per cent limit. The IRS is the enforcement arm of the wage and price program.

The Giants mailed 1972 contracts during the weekend to all of their ball players. Jerry Donovan, Horace Stoneham's right hand man, didn't check with the San Francisco IRS office beforehand. Donovan was guided by John Gaherin's guidelines. Gaher is negotiator for ball club owners in their dealings with the Major League Baseball Players Association.

DONOVAN DIDN'T come right out and admit that 1972 Giant contracts exceed the 5.5 per cent limit but he acknowledged that the Candlestick Park front office wasn't taking the hard line of the Cardinals. He seemed quite surprised by the announcement from St. Louis.

"We did enclose a letter with our new contracts explaining the situation," said Donovan.

Did he mean the letter set forthe the possibility of the contracts having to be renegotiated if the IRS cracked down?

"Yes," said Donovan.

SPOKESMEN at IRS headquarters in San Francisco acknowledged that "unusual equities are involved" in baseball contracts, the first to come up in sports since Phase II of the president's wage and price program went into effect Nov. 14.

However, it was impossible to get anyone at IRS to give a firm "yes" or "no" answer to baseball contracts that exceed the 5.5 per cent livit.

There are going to be a lot of unhappy ball players this year if they are limited to 5.5 per cent pay raises.

TAKE THE CASE of Vida Blue who made it quite clear that he expects "a whole lot more money" this year after becoming a 20-game winner in his first major league season. As a rookie Blue earned $12,800 last year, the 1971 minimum for rookies.

The rookie minimum goes up to $13,500 this year. If Blue were limited to a 5.5 per cent increase of his $12,800 last season, his 1972 salary would be $13,504, just $4 more than 1972 rookies will get. A 20-game winner making $4 more than a rookie! Ridiculous.

HIGH LEAP — World long jump record holder Bob Beamon demonstrated the form that enabled him to cover 29-feet, 2½ inches in the 1968 Olympic Games as he prepared for the San Francisco Examiner Indoor Games at the Cow Palace Friday. The two-time winner of the outstanding athlete award in these games will join the long jump and triple jump competitions.

birds —all on the par five holes —four bogies and one double bogey.

"I made some good putts and I also missed some," said Nicklaus. "I'm not disappointed with the 74 at Spyglass. That's a hillside course and no one is going to take it apart. It's the severeity of the greens, though, which makes it so tough."

Jacklin's reaction to his 70 at Spyglass was one of joy.

"Obviously, I'm happy with the round," he said. "I didn't like a few of my shots and I missed some easy putts, but I also made some. You can't hope to make all of them."

While things seemed to be falling into place for Nicklaus and Jacklin, George Archer and Tom Shaw were having their problems, along with a lot of others in the big field shooting for a winner's purse of $28,000.

Archer, who won the Los Angeles Open in a playoff last week to launch the 1972 tour, added a 73 to his opening 76 and was back in the pack at 149. Shaw, the defending Crosby champ, shot a second round 74 and was even farther back at 151.

Billy Casper, who hasn't played well since winning the Kaiser International in October, had a second round 77 and was at 152. Sammy Snead and Dutch Harrison, a pair of former Crosby winners playing here for the first time in nearly two decades, both had second round 77s. Snead was at 154 and Harrison at 159.

In the pro-am divifion, the team of Cerrudo and Paul Spengler fired a best-ball 67 for a two-day total of 140, four over par and ten shots behind the leaders, Tony Jacklin and Jim Mahoney.

UPSET

Drake Downs Terra Linda '5'

Now we know why the Drake High School basketball team is called the Pirates — last night it stole the ball, the style, and eventually the game from a good Terra Linda team.

Drake lifted its Marin County Athletic League record to 1-2 and dropped the Trojans to the same mark with a 70-43 triumph at Terra Linda marked by the same kind of balanced effort the Pirates have been producing all year.

Drake pressed on defense, ran on offense and shot well, swiping all three weapons from Terra Linda's arsenal. The outcome was not in doubt after the second quarter.

John Channell scored 12 points and Jit Singh 10 for the Pirates, who shot 50 per cent from the floor on 28 of 56 shots. Terra Linda, by contrast, was an agonizing 29 per cent (17 of 62), including just seven of 34 in the second half.

Drake's full-court press forced the Trojans into 13 turnovers, while the Pirates and ball-handler Dave Wilkinson kept their poise against Terra Linda's press and made only three errors themselves.

Tom Carlisle grabbed nine rebounds, while Channell and Dan Trimble snatched eight apiece as Drake outrebounded the taller Trojans, 40-28. Trimble got six of those, plus six points, in the breakaway second quarter.

Terra Linda's scoring was led by Brian Wall and Rick Love with nine points each. The inside-outside duo of John Buckley and Mark Lowey, which had been averaging 31.5 a game, was held to a combined total of eight.

Marin Catholic Bows To Tamalpais

"I'm beginning to think we know how to play defense after all."

The words came from Tamalpais High School basketball coach Bernie Schneider following his team's 55-33 victory over Marin Catholic last night on Tam's adopted home court, the College of Marin.

"After the Drake game (which Tam won Tuesday, 36-29) I thought it was just bad offense by our opponent," said Schneider, "but we played exceptional defense last night.

"Jared McFerrin did a fine defensive job, holding his man to four points, and Will Garner blocked several shots. Our defense is harrassing people to the point where the shots they're getting aren't going in."

The victory left Tam tied for the Marin County Athletic League lead with San Rafael surprise victor over Redwood last night, at 3-0. The Indians play Redwood Tuesday.

Will Garner scored 20 points for Tam, and McFerrin added 12. The Indians shot a steady but not spectacular 39 per cent from the floor, connecting on 22 of 56 shots.

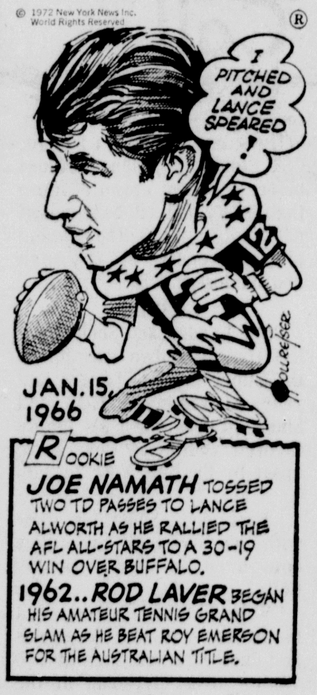

Marin Catholic made just 13 field goals and had no scorers in double figures. Tam led after three quarters, 37-19.

Seals Triumph On Road

VANCOUVER, B.C. (UPI)— White polar bear shoe skates have made tigers out of the California Golden Seals.

After putting on the new footwear for the first time before 5,152 appreciative fans in Oakland Friday night, the Seals rallied from a 2-1 deficit with four consecutive goals in the third period to beat the Vancouver Canucks 5-3.

Superstitions notwithstanding, you can bet the Seals were again adorned in the flashy skates when they met the Canucks in Vancouver this afternoon.

Stan Gilbertson, Walt McKechnie, Joey Johnston and Gerry Pinder tallied in succession to give the Seals their second straight victory. A third consecutive win today would be a season high for California.

Pinder's goal, which came on a power play, was his 17th of the season and tied him for the team lead with slump-ridden Bobby Sheehan.

California opened the scoring in the first period on a 20-footer by Carol Vadnais. But Vancouver tied it on Jocelyn Guevremont's seventh goal of the season midway through the opening period. The Canucks went ahead 2-1 in the second period when Orland Kurtenbach picked up a loose puck and tallied his 13th of the season while the Seals had a two-man advantage.

Clippers Triumph In Church League

Eric Stockstad scored 18 points to lead the Golden Gate Clippers to a 54-12 victory over Tiburon Baptist Church yesterday in San Rafael Parks and Recreation department church basketball league play.

Steve Brandon pumped in 14 as Faith Lutheran defeated the Valley Baptist Chargers, 46-32. Valley Baptist's other team, the Crusaders, defeated San Rafael Christian Church, 42-25, behind Steve Carmicael's 12 points.

San Rafael Gal Bowls 667 Series

When you're number two, you try harder.

Marilyn Epidendio of San Rafael proved this with her bowling performances at Greenbrae Lanes the past two weeks. After finishing second to Penny Tauscher the previous week in the Greenbrae bowling establishment, Mrs. Epidendio snatched top honors this week by rolling a 667 series. The figure edged Greenbrae Lanes colleagues Bud Kimmell and Tony Mendes by four pins.

"Howie really really stabilized our offense," he said. "He controlled the ball, and we didn't lose it when he was in there." The little guard was sent in during the third quarter when San Marin was threatening.

"Barnes did an excellent job on the boards for us," the coach continued. "he must have gotten about 13 rebounds."

With Barnes rebounding and Conklin shooting, Novato raced out to a 24-15 lead, but San Marinrin began to rally following the insertion of Mazeres. The Mustangs tied the score at 25-25 on eight quick points by Wright, fell behind 39-31, and inched back to within two at 43-41 before Robinson went into his act.

UCLA, Southern Cal Ruin Bay Area Foes

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

The rest of the Pacific Eight today had to face the fact that none of the six basketball teams north of the Tehachapis was in the class with the two powerhouses to the south.

UCLA and Southern California both looked like the top 10 squads they are with awesome wins Friday night.

USC flattened a good Cal team 102-69 by hitting two thirds of their shots in the first half to build up a 60-37 lead. Joe Mackey wound up with 19 and Paul Westphal 18 for the Trojans.

UCLA meanwhile led Stanford 59-35 at the half and 118-79 at the merciful final buzzer on its way to its 26th consecutive win. Big Bill Walton was never better in the pivot with 32 points and 15 rebounds while Claude Terry of the tribe was the only unawed Indian as he hit 23. Stanford had carried a five-game win string into Pauley Pavilion.

The two Bay Area teams swap foes tonight, but the scores may be more or less the same.

Washington, fighting Oregon State for the honor of being the best of the rest, ran its record to 11-3 with a 91-81 win over invading Cincinnati. The score is misleading since the Huskies were breezing 80-57 with 5:53 left to go.

Cincinnati moves on to Oregon State tonight while Idaho is at Washington State and Oregon has a tough customer to handle in New Mexico State.

But the Pacific Eight is not the only Coast conference with two coleaders dominating the proceedings.

The PCAA has its own pair of toughies in Long Beach State and UOP. Long Beach State hosts a good UC Santa Barbara squad tonight while UOP goes calling on Fresno State. The latter nipped San Jose State 79-78 Friday with Jerry Pinder scoring 31 for the winners. Another PCAA game tonight finds Los Angeles State at San Diego State.

The West Coast Athletic Conference finds USF and Santa Clara fighting it out for honors. The Broncs host a good Seattle team tonight while USF greets St. Marys. More WCAC action includes Nevada Reno at Pepperdine and Nevada Las Vegas at Loyola.

Even the Far Western Conference has the twin look. Sacramento State made it 3-0 with an impressive 74-54 win at Hayward State with Maurice Woodard pumping in 20 while San Francisco State disposed of Stanislaus State 84-66. Humboldt State beat the Cal Aggies 77-57.

In one in the Northwest, center Larry Clark broke school records by hitting 36 points and grabbing 25 rebounds in a 94-71 Simon Fraser win over Oregon College.

Other scores: Arizona 78 Colorado State 74, Arizona State 81 Wyoming 67, Pomona 92 Caltech 49, Biola 69 Fresno Pacific 41, Warner Pacific 68 Lewis and Clark 64, Eastern Oregon 95 Oregon Tech 77, Eastern Washington 105 Southern Oregon 86, US International 72 Pasadena 65, UC Riverside 102 UC Fullerton 92, Grand Canyon 82 Santa Fe 78, Portland State 89 Alaska 81, Pacific Lutheran 86 Pacific 62, Whitworth 83 Linfield 72, Western Washington 81 Central Washington 73.

EXAMINER GAMES

San Francisco Meet Adds Keino In Mile

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)— Kenya's Kip Keino heads a group of five four-minute milers next Friday in a starstudded indoor track meet at the Cow Palace.

In addition to Keino, whose 3:53.1 is the fastest mile in history behind Jim Ryun's world mark, eight world record holders are entered in the indoor meet sponsored by the San Francisco Examiner.

They include shot putters Randy Matson and Al Feuerbach, hurdlers Rod Milburn and Willie Davenport, sprinter Ronnie Ray Smith, quarter-miler Lee Evans, high jumper Pat Matzdar and long jumper Bob Beaman.

Battling Keino in the mile will be veteran Olympian Tom Von Ruden (3:56.9), Chris Fisher of Australia (3:59.1), Bob Wheeler of Duke and John Lawson of Kansas. Lawson is one of the few Americans ever to whip Keino.

Completing the classic mile field will be Keith Munson of Oregon State whose best is 4:00.7. No one has ever run a sub four-minute mile at the Examiner games.

Matson and Feuerbach, outdoor and indoor record holders, will renew their battle in the shot put which saw each of them break the world mark at the Cow Palace last year before Feuerbach upset the giant Texan. They will be joined by George Woods, a 68-foot thrower.

In the sprints, Smith will get stiff competition from Lennox Miller of Jamaica and Warren Edmonson of UCLA. Miller and Smith share the world's fastest time of 9.9 in the 100 meters.

Milburn of Southern University was the No. 1 hurdler in the world last year and is unbeaten in 27 races. He lowered the world mark for the 120-yard hurdles to 13 seconds flat.

Karl Schranz Captures Second Downhill Race

KITZBUEHEL, Austria (UPI) — Austria's veteran ski ace Karl Schranz today captured his second downhill race in two days when he raced down the Streifalm course in 2:24.36 minutes.

The 33-year-old skier pulled off his second startling victory in the Hahnenkamm race. He also proved the best of the skiing elite Fridax in the Kandahar race, contested on the same course.

France's Henri Duvillard, who finifhed second in Friday's race, took second place again with a time of 2:24.55 and Heini Messner of Austria was third in 2:24.86. Bernhard Russi of Switzerland, third in Friday's downhill, was fourth this time with a 2:25.58 clocking.

The United States, which placed four men among the top 10 finishers Friday, managed only one placing among the top 10 today. Bob Cochran of Richmond, Vt., finished in a tie for ninth with a time of 2:27.0.

Today's race was the next-to last of the pre-Olympic downhill trials. The final downhill will be held next week on the Lauberhorn at Wengen, Switzerland.

High Jump Mark Set By Reynaldo Brown

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (UPI) —Reynaldo Brown became the first American ever to clear 7-foot-4 in the indoor high jump at the CYO Invitation Track Meet Friday night.

South Africa Ban Lifted In Davis Cup

LONDON (UPI)—The Davis Cup tennis competition has again been thrust to the focal point of international and interracial tensions.

After the two-year ban against South Africa (which practices apartheid policies) was lifted Friday, world reaction began to shape an ominous future for the tennis classic.

A spokesman for an antiapartheid group in London indicated that demonstrations would be held at every tournament if South Africa plays and that his group would encourage other nations to withdraw.

Marin Catholic Frosh Down Redwood, 56-39

Gary Peak led Drake to a 54-43 victory over Tamalpais with 16 points. Doug Carlisle dropped in 10 as Terra Linda edged San Rafael, 41-39.

Plenty Of Proof To Arctic Air's Punch

By U.P.INTERNATIONAL

The reluctant wheezing of automobile engines and the chattering teeth of motorists testified today to the success of an invasion of Arctic air in the nation's midsection.

The winter had been shaping up as an unseasonably mild one until some of the coldest weather in recent years moved in from the Arctic and spread from the Northern Rockies to the Great Lakes Friday, sending the mercury plummeting to record lows.

Furnace-stopping power failures hit homes, high rise apartments, businesses, several hospitals and a zoo in Chicago Friday with the wind-chill factor at 32 below zero and dropping. The power outages were caused by a fire in a power substation. The power— and heat—were finally restored, but the Lincoln Park Zoo decided to close its doors to the public to keep the animals warm in their winter quarters that had been left heatless by the outage.

The mercury plunged to 27 below in Sioux Falls, S.D., today to establish a record low for the date.

Subzero weather extended from Michigan and central Montana to northern Oklahoma and the Northern Texas Panhandle early today and polar air covered all of the nation east of the Rockies except the Florida Peninsula.

Cold wave warnings were in effect today for Georgia, the Carolinas, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maine, New Hampshire and portions of Virginia and Maryland and a hard freeze was expected in Louisiana and Mississippi, except for the coastal areas.

Locally heavy snow squalls occurred to the south and east of the Great Lakes and a heavy snow warning was in effect for western New York, where six inches of snow or more was expected. Light snows fell in the hills of Missouri and Arkansas and in the Northern Rockies.

Jon Christian Ballard, 34, of Fairfax, wjs arraigned yesterday in Marin Municipal Court on a felony charge of arson.

He is to plead to the charge Friday.

Laws Alone Cannot Protect The Consumer

The age of consumerism surely has arrived.

A sampling of complaint letters to Better Business Bureaus across the nation shows that the businessmen are seen as greedy, money-grabbing, unprincipled parasites on the social organism.

Sen. Frank E. Moss, D-Utah, a leading advocate of consumer demands, wants Congress to enact warranty legislation and minimum damageability standards, and create such new federal bureaucracies as an "independent" Consumer Protection Agency, a Consumer Product Safety Agency, and a Federal Insurance Guaranty Agency.

These new bodies would be in addition to the Federal Trade Commission, the Food and Drug Administration, and the attorney general's consumer protection section.

If the consumer saves a dime as the result of all this bureaucracy, it surely will be only at the cost of considerably more than a dime in new costs of government.

It all makes one wonder if politicans are actually exploiting consumer fears and prejudices. Senator Moss staunchly denies this, of course.

JUST 60 YEARS AGO, false and misleading advertising had come to be such a problem that the advertising industry itself sponsored the formation of the first Better Business Bureaus. For six decades BBBs have strived to expose deception and fraud, and to encourage self-regulation of advertising.

Now there are 143 local Better Business Bureaus across the country, including the one in San Francisco which serves Marin. In the past year, these bureaus received more than eight million complaints and inquiries from consumers — approximately one for every 12 American families.

The BBBs are affiliated with 800 chambers of commerce through the nation, enabling even wider dissemination of consumer protection information. The Marin County Chamber of Commerce and Visitors Bureau is an affiliate of the San Francisco BBB, as are several other chambers in Marin.

More often than not, this is the result. In instances where it is not, BBB rolls up its sleeves. The offending businessman may be expelled from BBB membership, relief may be obtained in court, or the matter can be turned over to a district attorney for prosecution.

A new technique, strongly advocated by president H. Bruce Palmer of Council of Better Business Bureaus, is the establishment of consumer arbitration panels to further encourage voluntary resolution of complaints.

Palmer also advocates establishment of a national consumer data bank.

If complaints fed into data bank computers from BBBs around the nation indicated a specific flaw in the product of one manufacturer, the Council of Better Business Bureaus could go direct to the manufacturer and insist on steps to remedy the source of the complaints and resolve those already received.

Better Business Bureas probably do as much to protect consumers as all the costly government agencies combined, and they are supported by voluntary contributions, not tax money.

A NEW WAVE of corporation executives is seeing consumerism in a new light.

"A saleable product is not enough; it must be safe, durable, attractive, convenient, and, if it is a food product, it should also be nutritious. To conduct a business profitably is not enough; it must be a business which does not pollute, which is compassionate as well as competitive . . ."

Thus spoke Howard C. Harder, board chairman of PCC International Inc., a corporate giant which lists Skippy's peanut butter among its better-known products.

Ralph Smathers, a BBB executive in Florida, summed up the problem when he told a Coronet magazine reporter recently:

"No matter how many laws the government passes, no matter how many policemen we have, no matter how many BBBs there are, people will still have to protect themselves . . .

"The government can put people in jail, they can get injunctions to stop people from breaking the law . . .

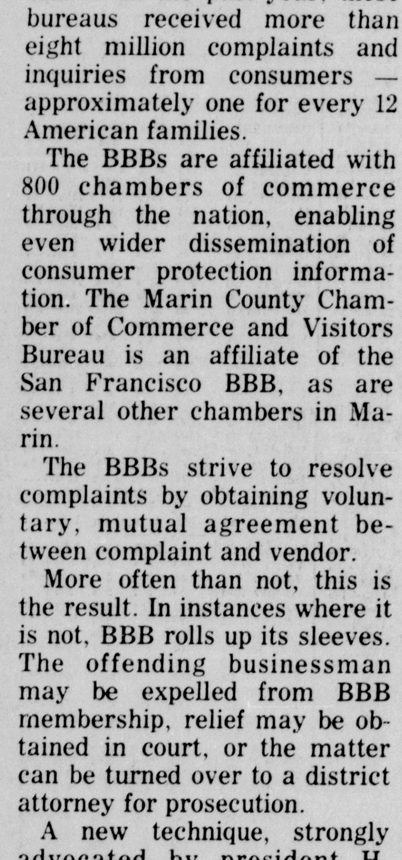

"No matter how much we do, there will always be a sharp operator who comes along with the game, and the consumer simply has to be shrewd enough to protect himself."

To this end, president Palmer of the Council of Better Business Bureaus has assigned a high priority to BBB efforts in the field of information dissemination. Informational pamphlets are being produced and distributed. A list of those readily available can be obtained from the BBB office in San Francisco. Audio-visual materials including TV "spots" are being produced. Branch offices are being established in ghetto areas, including some in San Francisco.

In short, the BBB can help a consumer arm himself to recognize and avoid deception and fraud. No amount of government spending can do this for us. In the end we must do it ourselves.

Planned Parenthood's Goals In Conflict

Mr. Craemer's article, "Planned Parenthood Seeks New Image," raises more questions than it answers. He is indeed correct in stating that there are a large number of unmarried girls who desperately need help because of pregnancy and venereal disease. The idea, however, that they can receive this help from a suddenly "benevolent-caring" organization, whose function has been the dispensation of contraceptives to teen-agers without parental consent and in direct violation of the law, is hard to swallow. How can an organization which counsels so many to have abortions profess to prepare young marrieds for parenthood? The two goals are diametrically opposed. You do not strengthen family life while simultaneously killing unborn babies. . .

Mr. Azzaro, the new executive director of the Planned Parenthood Association in Marin, will have to do more than superimpose a new function on his organization to gain public acceptance. Respect and trust have to be earned, by organizations as well as individuals. Planned Parenthood with a long history of offering abortion services to the young, sometimes without parental knowledge, contributed to the 116,000 estimated babies killed in our state last year. The organization will have to undergo basic changes before it can gain the community's trust. Congratulations to the demonstrators at Planned Parenthood. It is obvious they were successful.

Council Not Idle On Fire Protection

I attended last Wednesday's meeting (Jan 5) of the Corte Madera Fire Committee and I feel it unfortunate that your Larry Mowell was not present, but relied on statements by others for his article in Friday's paper on this meeting.

When a motion was made by a committeeman to recommend to the town council the immediate hiring of four firemen, I pointed out to the committee that the council had already taken action in this direction at its Dec. 6 meeting when it instructed the town manager to immediately start a recruiting program and to establish an eligibility list. The committeeman then withdrew his motion.

I feel that I cannot, in all fairness, continue to remain silent in the face of the repeated inference that the present council has done nothing to improve the protective services in Corte Madera. When the present council was seated in 1968 the fire and police departments were under a single head and both were understaffed. They are not completely separate departments, each with its own command. At that time there was only one full-time fireman and there are now five full-time men in the department. Admittedly, more men are needed and, as mentioned above, the council has already taken action in this direction. A new and larger piece of fire fighting equipment was purchased and delivered to the department in October 1970.

This Council also recognized the shortage of manpower during the daytime hours, when a majority of our very fine volunteers are at work and away from Corte Madera, and instigated the plan of training our public works department employees and gardeners as firemen so they could take up this slack.

I am extremely disappointed that the fire consultants in their preliminary report took a "shot gun" and "big city" approach and were not more constructive. To me the report clearly indicates that they failed to adequately inform themselves on conditions in Corte Madera and its needs.

Could Howard Hughes Really Be The Chinese Candidate?

WASHINGTON — There is far more at stake in the Howard Hughes-McGraw Hill-Life magazine affair than whether Mr. Hughes did or did not sell his autobiography for publication.

The American people, who have been reeling from one credibility crisis to another, are now being asked to decide whether two of the most distinguished publishing companies in this country or one of the richest men in the world are telling the truth.

The evidence is strong on both sides. Howard Hughes in his famous telephone interview says there is not a shred of truth in it. McGraw Hill and Life both insist they have the real thing and plan to go ahead and publish the autobiography no matter what Mr. Hughes says.

The problem for the public, which up until this time has remained neutral, is that Mr. Hughes is such a mystery man that we don't even know what he looks like any more, and it's causing tremendous paranoia in everyone's home.

FOR EXAMPLE the other night my family was watching the news, and suddenly Hubert Humphrey came on the screen to announce he was once again a candidate for President.

"You know," my wife said, "it's funny, but I get the feeling that that isn't really Hubert Humphrey."

"How can you say that?" I said, looking closer at the screen.

"Suppose," she said, "just suppose, that person was Howard Hughes."

"Impossible," I said. "I know Hubert Humphrey. That's his voice. Besides why would Howard Hughes want to be Hubert Humphrey?"

"Nobody knows why Howard Hughes does things," she said. "It would be a perfect disguise for him. Everyone would think he was locked up in the Bahamas, and all the time he would be going around the country making speeches and meeting people and looking for new things to invest in."

"I can't believe it," I said, with my face pressed as close to the screen as I could get it.

"Well, we all know Humphrey has no money. It's very interesting that he would announce for President right after Howard Hughes denied he had sold his autobiography."

"I'm sure it's just a coincidence," I said. "You have to come up with something more concrete than that."

BY THEN Hubert Humphrey had faded from the screen, and after a commercial we were shown films of Sheik Mujibur Rahman being welcomed in Bangladesh by his supporters.

My wife said, "Did you notice his fingernails?"

"What's wrong with his fingernails?"

"They're short. Howard Hughes said in his press conference that he had short fingernails."

"Lots of people have short fingernails. Wait a minute. You don't think Sheik Mujibur Rahman is Howard Hughes!"

"I'm not saying he is, and I'm not saying he isn't. But look at his hair. Howard Hughes said he cuts his own hair. The sheik looks as if he cuts his own hair, too."

"You're going bonkers," I said.

"Well, why didn't he say that he wasn't the sheik in the interview?"

THE NEWS PROGRAM went to another commercial and then gave an interview with Ralph Nader. I watched my wife carefully. Finallq she shook her head and said, "No, he's too young."

The final segment of the show showed pictures of Africa, natives dancing, drums beating, and eventually the camera closed in on Mrs. Richard Nixon wearing a native dress and a towering headdress.

My wife sat up in her chair and said, "Of course. Why hadn't I thought of it!"

My God," I cried. "You don't think Pat Nixon is really Howard Hughes?"

She just smiled. "I'm not ruling it out. Everyone knows the real Mrs. Nixon hates to fly."

Jack Anderson's Disclosures Take Meeting Out Of Context

WASHINGTON — Between mid-March and Dec. 3 last year, the Washington Special Action Group held 19 meetings; the review group, which supplies the raw material for the National Security Council, held seven meetings; the council had two full-dress sessions.

If all the papers out of these 28 sessions had been made public, the over-all picture of the India-Pakistan crisis might have been quite different from that which emerges from the "leak" of selected WASAG documents and other fragments. In this sense the Jack Anderson revelations were out of context. While in the big picture the final decision favoring Paksitan against India might still have been construed as error, the dilemma of the policymakers, their motives, and the intelligence on which they relied would at least have been clear.

But whether any nation, and particularly a super-power with world-wide responsibilities, can conduct day-to-day diplomacy in a goldfish bowl is highly questionable. The relationship of trust and confidence with other powers is at stake, as was shown in the Anderson revelations.

With arms aid to Pakistan cut off, consideration was given to calling on friendly third powers to transship arms that had come from the United States. One of these powers was Jordan. Fortunately, a position paper hastily drafted shot down this trial balloon.

For the purpose of example, however, suppose this had gone through and Jordan had furnished arms from the United States. Revelation of this transaction would make King Hussein's position even more precarious than it is today. The guerrillas would have intensified their efforts to destroy him, thereby further imperiling the uncertain balance between war and peace in the Middle East.

The shibboleths of democracy are often irrelevant to the deployment of power in a world in which power politics is still a prime reality. Woodrow Wilson went to the Versailles Peace Conference proclaiming open covenants openly arrive at. His naivete and the woeful inadequacy of the American team contributed to a fatally flawed peace riddled with secret agreements that bore the promise of a second world war.

The Pentagon papers and the WASAG documents are not on the same footing. The former are history, disclosing grievous errors of judgment and conduct that led the United States to disaster. Conceivably, if anyone can learn from history this was a lesson that should be written in letters of fire.

The WASAG documents deal with the stuff of a crisis — the American position on the Indian subcontinent — still very much with us. Much of the discussion concerned contingency planning. The question of third-country transshipment of American arms was one of several proposals thrown up in hectic discussion as the war intensified.

If there can be no private conversation at a high level, diplomacy becomes impossible. In the India-Pakistan crisis "hard intelligence" reported an imminent attack by India against West Pakistan. Involved was the whole power relationship between China, the Soviet Union and the United States. This intelligence was against the background of the computation that Russia had provided India with $2.5 billion in arms since 1967. Peking was to be proved a paper tiger and the dismemberment of Pakistan a further encirclement of China. The consequences of this are still to be reckoned with.

I happen to believe, without having had the benefit of all the 28 secret documents, that the decision to publicly favor Pakistan against India was a mistake. But to think that disclosures, even if they had come as the decision was being taken, would have made a difference is to believe that honesty and goodness turn on the power of knowledge. If that were so, the world would be a far better place, and we should not be bedeviled by the fearful challenge of states that rely on the secrecy of power.

Likewise, to believe that the current disclosures will bring any reform is to believe in the miraculous transformation of an administration as secretive as any in recent history. On the contrary, the screws will be tightened and at the next WASAG meeting all eyes will be on the lookout for note takers.

Hubert Humphrey's Determination Looks Almost Like Masochism

WASHINGTON — No doubt his followers call it determination. Those watching from arm's length, who remember what happened to him in the same neighborhood less than four years ago, might call it masochism instead. Otherwise why would Hubert Humphrey choose Philadelphia as the scene for his announcement that he is running for President yet again?

To understand why he is running at all is much easier. By any objective logic, the man whose career has closely paralleled the ups and downs of the Democratic Party for more than a quarter-century, who has been one of its most eloquent philosophers and pugnacious battlers, who has given the party and its causes his years and tears, who has accepted heartbreak time and time again with never a hint of quitting, who has come within half-a-million votes of winning the presidency only weeks after the party scraped its lowest point in modern history — surely that man deserves another try.

SIMILARLY, TO APPRECIATE why he announced his new candidacy when he did is clear to anyone who has followed the progress of the other hopeful Democrats since the precampaign elbowing started. Humphrey's original plan was to wait till the others had effectively nullified each other in this year's unprecedented series of primaries, then to step into the last few of those contests with heavy financial backing and finish ahead. But Edmund Muskie's growing strength caused the Minnesotan to realize that for his own purposes he had created a formidable monster when he chose Muskie to run with him in 1968, and if he was to have any chance of stopping him he had to move early. So he did.

That covers the whether and when. But in Philadelphia?

Philadelphia, long a Democratic stronghold, is where Humphrey made his first effort to draw a big crowd after the Democratic convention at Chicago in 1968. After limping home to Minnesota for a week of planning and recuperation, he came into the Pennsylvania metropolis at noon, lunch hour, always calculated by campaign advance-men to give the impression of greatest downtown turnout for a candidate. He had the city organization of Rep. William Green Jr. supposedly exerting itself to pack the sidewalks. He had Frank Rizzo, now mayor but then police chief, doing the crowd estimates for the visiting press. He also had as a target the vast crowds pulled by Mr. Nixon in the streets of Chicago, in that same week after Humphrey and the Democrats had departed amid the lingering smell of tear gas.

He found antiwar demonstrators all along his parade route on Chestnut Street. He heard them break in with chants as he began his speech in Kennedy Plaza. He saw them burning a miniature American flag and raising a banner equating him with Chicago's Mayor Daley and both of them with the Nazis. He saw the public's attention turn away from him and toward the scuffle when his supporters tore down the banner.

Frank Rizzo did his best. He estimated that 250,000 to 300,000 Philadelphians watched and waved along the parade route, and that 100,000 listened at the plaza. Reporters, including friendly ones, figured the route turnout at about a third and the plaza crowd at about a tenth of Rizzo's estimates. That made them both a small fraction of what Mr. Nixon had enjoyed in Daley's Democratic Chicago.

HUMPHREY SAW THEN that his campaign was going to be a long series of little Chicagos, with the chanters and shouters taking away the television cameras while the dedicated few cheering him were ignored and while the great numb majority stayed home and watched it on the tube. He left Philadelphia that day for Denver with a new realization of how far was up.

Yet he not only stuck it out, he grabbed onto each isolated cheer in those early weeks as if it were approving thunder, and drew strength from them until at mid-October he was closing the gap at a rate frightening to Mr. Nixon and the Republicans. Growing hoarse in marathon campaign days, scheduling himself again and again into the big swing states, he put on one of the greatest stretch drives America ever watched.

He lost. But he came close. And despite that sad September day in Philadelphia, he more than doubled Nixon's vote there and carried Pennsylvania by nearly enough votes to have swung the nation had he been able to spread them across the country.

Congress Is Gearing For 'No Fault' Auto Insurance

By MIKE FEINSILBER

WASHINGTON (UPI) — All the motorists who are perfectly happy with the present automobile insurance system could probably fit into the back seat of a Volkswagen. Many of the others have been writing angry letters to Congress.

Their complaints center on climbing premiums, allegedly arbitrary cancellation of policies, fear of cancellation if they file claims, and asserted underpayment of claims.

They also are unhappy about long waits for trial in court cases—16 months for the average case, 5 years in some instances —and about juries that award astronomical damages to soma accident victims — and nothing to others.

JUDGES ARE unhappy, too, because accident insurance suits are taking up to 17 per cent of courts' time. Even major segments of the insurance industry have soured on a system which engendered so much ill will and drained the business of profitability.

Congress is about to respond. The betting is that Congress will pass a law next year establishing an entirely new auto insurance system to compensate the 50,000 lives lost and the many others injured each year in auto accidents.

Congress likes nothing better than to pass laws with high consumer (voter) appeal — especially in an election year, especially when no new massive expenditure of federal funds is involved and especially when it is answering the demands of an articulate and aroused middle class. Insurance firms favoring the move are creating a receptive climate for the change with full-page advertisements and television commercials.

THE NEW system is called "no fault" insurance because fault no longer would be a factor in determining whether an accident victim would be compensated for his injury.

Instead, the victim or his family would receive compensation for his life, injuries or lost wages from the insurance company which covered the vehicle he was driving or riding in or which struck him.

Under today's system, there must be a determination in every accident as to which driver was negligent. That frequently means that an injured person who was also negligent gets nothing. All too frequently, it means bargaining between two insurance companies or a legal tangle with the costs of going to court eating away at the sum that was to have paid for the victim's losses.

The system covering property damage resulting when two or more vehicles collide would be left just about untouched by the no-fault system. Those disputes are easier to settle and generally far less costly.

BUT IT is less easy to place a dollar value on life or limb. Harder yet is it to evaluate intangible losses —heartache, pain and suffering, the cost of a lifelong limp, the inconvenience of having been an accident victim.

It is on this point —how to compensate what lawyers call "pain and suffering" or "loss of enjoyment of life" claims — that opponents of no-fault focus. They contend that a person who has suffered has an unchallengeable right to go to court to seek damages from the negligent driver —or from his insurer.

This view is advanced primarily by the legal profession. These attorneys frame their argument in terms of principle, but their livelihood also is involved. Trial lawyers collect over $1 billion a year in fighting such suits —one fifth of lawyers' total income.

AFTER 10 days of intensive hearings this year by the Senate Commerce Committee, a compromise took shape intended to answer that argument. Essentially, it would permit drivers voluntarily to buy additional insurance covering the "pain and suffering" of an accident. All drivers would be required to carry insurance covering the more tangible medical bills resulting from a crash.

The next step comes in January when the committee is to meet to draft a final version of its bill. The chief sponsor, Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., believes that version will be passed over the objections of the trial lawyers.

The administration favors no-fault, too, but argues that states should have the opportunity to adopt it before the federal government moves into an area heretofore left to the states. Massachusetts and the commonwealth of Puerto Rico have put no-fault into effect — with generally good results — and several other states are moving toward it.

THE COMPROMISE likely to emerge from January's deliberations would establish a federal system to go intoeffect in three to five years unless states in the meantime have adopted systems at least comparable.

As for the lawyers' argument over "pain and suffering," proponents of no-fault say it is a good principle but that it produces unsatisfactory results in practice.

In practice, they say, well-todo people, able to make a good appearance in court and hire a lawyer (whose compensation often is a percentage of what he can convince a jury to award) get overcompensated while the poor get less —or, in 45 per cent of the cases, nothing.

They base this contention on a massive Transportation Department study of the insurance system. It found that collegeeducated accident victims collect an average of 63 per cent of their net economic loss resulting from accidents while people with an eighth grade education collect 23 per cent of their real loss —even though their loss is usually much lower.

CONFOUNDING this distortion of justice, they say, is evidence that the poor, whila collecting less, pay more for their insurance. Rates are higher in urban neighborhoods, where the poor tend to live, than in the suburbs.

The study also showed that auto accident victims suffer more than $5 billion a year in economic losses but recover less than half of that from insurance. More than half of what they do recover comes not from auto insurance but from life insurance or health insurance or Social Security.

In all, of the $14 billion a year paid for auto insurance, only $7 billion returns to policyholders —two-thirds of it for the repair of cars and one-third to compensate victims.

CONSEQUENTLY, the proponents say, when no-fault is adopted, auto insurance rates are bound to decline, or at least halt their steady climb. Massachusetts drivers have realized substantial savings in the one year their state has had the new system.

The idea is to keep disputes out of court, but the legislation recognizes that some court cases would be inevitable: what of the stock market speculator who claims the accident which struck him down while on his way to his broker prevented him from making a killing on the market?

To keep such disputes to a minimum, the draft legislation would provide that issues which can't be resolved by negotiation would go to court. The insurance company would pay the policyholder's attorney's fees, even if it wins the case, unless the court found that his case was "fraudulent, frivolous or excessive." Insurance firms are sure to oppose that provision.

THE LEGISLATION also would provide for assigned claims plans in each state to cover damages caused by (illegal) uninsured vehicles or to pay damages covered by a policy issued by a company which has gone bankrupt.

One more argument is advanced by those who oppose no-fault. They say the system would lead to more accidents, more injuries, more deaths. Relieved of the fear that he will be punished by the cancellation of his policy for negligence, the argument goes, the driver will drive less safely.

"Only the guilty will get their money's worth under no-fault insurance," says Richard Markus, president of the American Trial Lawyers Association.

"With no-fault insurance, you pay more and get less," he says. "The drunk, the drag racer and the speeder are treated with new honor and distinction while taking their payments from the rights of the innocent."

SEN. HART disputes that view.

"Surely," he says, "most of us would agree that the threats of loss of insurance or increased rates are far down the list of what induces us to drive carefully. Much ahead on that list would be such things as fear of imprisonment, physical injury to ourselves and our passengers, damage to our cars and sometimes a thing so simple as inconvenience."

Let the police and the courts punish the unsafe driver, he argues, and let the insurance companies concern themselves solely with compensating the victims — faultless and negligentN'alike —of accidents.

When a man catches pneumonia, Hart says, his health insurance company doesn't refuse to pay his hospital bills if it finds he was negligent in failing to carry an umbrella in the rain.

SAN RAFAEL, CALIFORNIA, SATURDAY, JANUARY 15, 1972 31

The Basics Of New Plan Before Congress

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Subject to revision, here is how the no-fault auto insurance plan now pending in Congress would work:

1. Every single owner would be required to buy a basic policy covering his own losses, losses of any other driver or passenger in his vehicle and losses suffered by any pedestrian injured by his vehicle.

2. Every insurance company would be required to insure any licensed driver who applies. Policies could not be cancelled except for failure to pay the premium or revocation of the policyholder's driving license.

3. THE BASIC policy would pay the medical and rehabilitation costs of those covered —the driver, his family, his passengers and his victims other than the occupants of another car. Those occupants would receive payments from the other driver's insurance.

4. In addition, all lost wages up to $1,000 a month would be paid until the injured person could resume work. People who earn more than $1,000 a month could buy optional "income replacement" insurance.

5. Services the victim would have performed if he hadn't been injured would be paid for. A housewife prevented from doing housework by a back injury would receive enough to hire a maid until she recovered.

6. THE BASIC policy would also cover property damage to anything but another vehicle in use —for example, a picket fence or a parked car struck by the policyholder's car. If two vehicles collide, their owners would have to look to their own collision insurance for compensation. Such insurance would not be mandatory.

7. The policy would pay for all losses — including the intangible "pain and suffering" —suffered by an occupant of the policyholder's vehicle or a pedestrian struck by it if the victim was not already covered —that is, was not the owner of a vehicle or members of his family.

8. FINALLY, insurance companies would have to offer collision insurance, plus insurance to cover "pain and suffering" losses. The amounts awarded for "pain and suffering" would be determined by existing state law. This coverage would be optional. This provision is intended to satisfy the lawyers' claim that every victim should have the right to recover damages for "pain and suffering."

To avoid costly duplication of coverage, the insurance buyer would have the right to decide whether he wants his medical coverage provided by his auto insurance or by his health insurance. If he chose health insurance, his auto insurance would cost less and he would have to look to his health insurance policy to cover medical expenses resulting from an accident. But he would no longer pay twice — and would no longer be able to collect twice — for a single injury.

Group Is Promoting A Better Link In Business World And Government

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A group of hand-picked executives from government and industry is promoting the idea that better cooperation between businessmen and bureaucrats can be helpful to both.

They're part of a program that puts talented, high-potential people from one camp to work in the other to give them a knowledge of the problems and managerial techniques on the other side of the fence.

They come from 19 participating government agencies and 30 participating business organizations ranging from the state department to American airlines.

AN AEROSPACE engineer, for example, is working as a special Labor Department assistant charged with helping unemployed aerospace workers. A consultant from the government's model cities program is working on a "social audit" for a consumer products company trying to improve its contribution to society.

Those taking part in the program range in age from 25 to 40 and earn from $20,000 to $30,000 a year. The hope is that they will be the nation's future cabinet members and corporation board chairmen.

Joseph McCullen, a consultant on leave from the New York-based firm of Spencer & Stuart Associates, is their den mother.

"We're looking for a cadre of people who could be called back for a high post in the government," he explained. "On the industry side nominees must be seen as future corporate officers."

THE "WE" referred to the presidential commission that appointed McCullen executive director of the interchange program.

The law setting up the program was signed by Lyndon B. Johnson on his last day in the presidency and its members were appointed by President Nixon soon after he became chief executive. Known officially as the President's Commission on Personnel Interchange, its members come from both business and government.

Among its 13 members are assistant attorney general (and Supreme Court nominee William Rehnquist; Robert Hampton, chairman of the Civil Service Commission; W. P. Gullander, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, and W.F. Rockwell, board chairman of North American Rockwell Corp. The chairman is David Mahoney, president of Norton Simon, Inc.

THEIR CHIEF duty is to screen the nominees, who are tapped by their company president or federal agency head.

Once the choices are made, McCullen goes to work. He monitors the successes and failures of his charges and doesn't hesitate to "yank" someone who doesn't work out.

Most do. "The program has about an 85 per cent batting average right now," the 36-year-old McCullen said.

McCullen, naturally, is shooting for 100 per cent. He hopes executive participation can be doubled. He likewise wants more minority representation.

Two blacks are participating and thinks women (none is involved) should and will be included.

HE ENCOURAGES participants to be candid about what's good and bad about the program and listens closely to the reactions of men such as James Kelly and Ronald Stegall.

Kelly, 33, is intense and articulate. He dots his sentences with questions: "Do you follow what I'm saying?" and "Am I making myself clear?"

He came to the Labor Department from the Rocketdyne Division of North American Rockwell Corp., where he was manager of the engine-vehicle integration segment of the space shuttle main engine program.

He is now a special assistant counseling Labor's manpower administration on programs for assisting unemployed aerospace engineers, scientists and technicians.

KELLY SAID his exposure to the federal bureaucracy has "broken down the image of poorly managed government operations... People here (at Labor) are highly motivated and highly talented and they face the same problems industry faces."

Kelly sees his present responsibilities as "both different and the same" as those at North American Rockwell.

"You're still managing people ... the problems here are more complex. In the government the problem is something that cuts across several industries and often industry and government are at odds."

He also found that measuring progress is more difficult in Washington than in private industry where endeavors show up as profit or loss.

"IN THE government goals are generally larger than making a profit," Kelly said. "You're attempting to satisfy a public need. There is nothing in front of you that says you're halfway there or a third of the way there."

While Kelly admires "the dedication and capability" of top bureaucrats in finding solutions to socio-economic problems, he thinks he's found some weak spots.

He feels the Civil Service system, because of its size, has spawned a "built-in protection" system that leads to a lack of incentive and "allows mediocrity to creep in."

He also thinks the government suffers from the lack of a "hard-driving informational campaign" about what it does for society.

"THE GOVERNMENT tendency," he observed, "is to hold a news conference, distribute press releases and assume everyone got the word."

Stegall, also 33, is reserved and thinks hard before replying to questions.

He spent "most of my working life" overseas until three years ago. He worked for the Agency for International Development in Afghanistan; Care, Inc., in Turkey and several feeding programs in India. He came to the model cities administration of the Department of Housing and Urban Development as a consultant.

HIS ASSIGNMENT sent him to Norton Simon, Inc., a New York-based consumer products company where he created his own position.

"I came back to this country with the belief that one of the most effective ways to meet its needs was to combine the capabilities of the public and private sectors," he said. "If America is going to solve her problems it's because of the things that government and business do together to each other's best interests . . . "

When he got to Norton Simon, the company bosses asked him what he wanted to do.

"I told them I wanted to do a social audit on the company." The firm's president told me to go ahead and see what the company could do to upgrade its corporate responsibility.

AS THE months passed, Stegall said he found that industry "is foundering in a lack of social understanding" although he found "a great deal of concern in the business community about social issues." As a result, he said, the public would not "discount the desire or capability of business" in helping cure social ills.

Stegall disagrees with the business attitude that it is accountable and government is not. He said:

"I SUBMIT that business is reasonably accountable in the economic picture, but business also decides what to make, where to make it and who to hire. Like government, it operates as an education institution. It teaches values to workers and society —but it has never been as accountable as government."

Stegall lauded the interchange program because it "institutionalizes the concept that this kind of exchange in both sectors is important. Without it people become isolated and insulated against the real world.

"We need to get another perspective."

THIS WEEK In The World

By U. P. INTERNATIONAL

Billionaire Howard Hughes, who for a decade and a half lived the life of a recluse, finally talked by telephone with newsmen to renounce his alleged autobiography.

Hughes, 65, spoke with several reporters Jan. 7 as they sat in a room at the Sheraton Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles. The phone linkup with Hughes spanned more than 3,000 miles as the eccentric one-time movie producer bared his feelings from his suite in the Britannia Beach Hotel on Paradise Island in the Bahamas.

The interview, in part, was called to renounce a forthcoming book edited by author Clifford Irving, who said he held a number of secret interviews with Hughes throughout the Western Hemisphere. Hughes said he knew of no such interviews.

Hughes also told the gathering he would soon end his reclusive life but hoped he would not have to spend the rest of his days in court fighting a number of legal battles that have cropped up during his self-imposed exile.

Around the World, Around the Clock

PHILADELPHIA — Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, vice president during the Johnson Administration, announced his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination, following a number of other Democrats into the political arena.

In addition to Humphrey, other Democrats who have now announced their intentions to seek the presidential nomination are Sen. Edmund Muskie of Maine, New York Mayor John Lindsay, Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota, Sen. Vance Hartke of Indiana, Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington, Gov. George Wallace of Alabama, former Sen. Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota and Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles.

WASHINGTON — A Federal District Court ordered the Treasury Department to withdraw the tax-exempt status of fraternal organizations which bar Negro members. As a consequence, any income earned by orders such as the Elks would be taxable. The court ruled, however, that private clubs, such as country clubs, would not lose their taxexempt status.

BATON ROUGE, La.—Four persons, two of them policemen, were killed when a gun battle erupted during a Negro demonstration. Fifteen other people were injured, including 12 blacks, eight of whom were shot, during the melee. The mayor of Baton Rouge, Woodrow Dumas, blamed the incident on a splinter group of the Black Muslims.

SAN FRANCISCO—A federal warrant was issued for an AWOL Army private who allegedly placed bombs in banks in New York, Chicago and San Francisco last year. He was identified as Ronald Kaufman. Kaufman holds a PH.D in psychology.

AWARENESS OF NIXON

Klein Plays Role In Better Press For President

By NORMAN KEMPSTER

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Nixon, who often chafes at what he considers unfair treatment by Washington newsmen, has delegated his longtime associate Herbert G. Klein to carry his version of events to the nation.

In his role as White House communications director, Klein travels from coast to coast to confer with newspaper and broadcast executives, appear on radio and television programs and make speeches. His objective is to explain and —if necessary —defend administration policy.

Discussing his assignment in a UPI interview, Klein said the Washington press corps is more critical of Nixon and is less willing to give him credit for his achievements than is the news media outside the capital and the public generally.

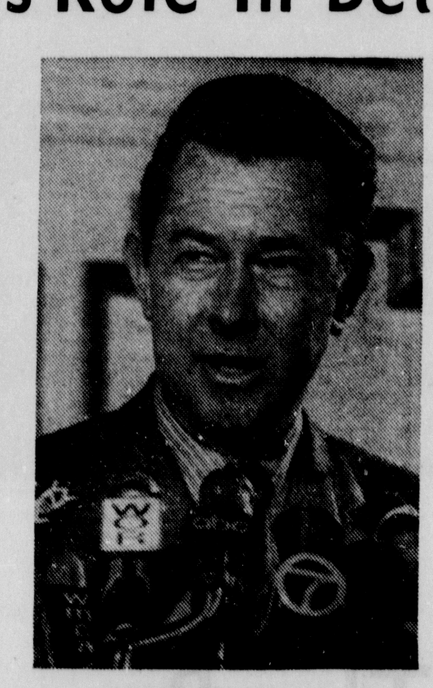

HE ALSO claims Washington reporters give Nixon less favorable treatment than that accorded most previous presidents.

"Particularly in President Kennedy's time, reporters were so enamoured that they were willing to overlook things," Klein said.

Does Nixon suffer from a worse press than his predecessor, former president Lyndon B. Johnson?

"President Johnson got very little credit in the last year or so of his administration," Klein said. "He got considerable credit before that. It (a bad press) has been fairly consistent with President Nixon."

NIXON IS acutely aware of what is written about him. He begins each day by leafing through the New York Times and The Washington Post, then reading carefully a summary of the reports in other newspapers, on television and on the United Press International and Associated Press wires.

HERBERT KLEIN
Seeks a better press

Klein said Nixon usually already knows the facts behind the news but "he also needs to know how it is reported ... he needs to know what are the publicly known facts."

"I think he is more fully informed about what the media is saying than any previous president," Klein said.

What does a President do who is fully informed about what is being said about him and who considers much of it unfair?

IN NIXON'S case, he is trying to bypass the Washington press corps and deal directly with the newspapers and broadcast stations upon which most Americans rely for their news.

Nixon is the first President to have both a communications director and a press secretary. Ronald L. Ziegler, the press secretary, deals with newsmen assigned to cover the White House, freeing Klein to spend more time than any previous government official on public relations outside Washington.

Klein, 53, is a former editor of the San Diego Union. His 30-year newspaper career has been interrupted frequently by service for Nixon. Their friendship began in 1946 during Nixon's first campaign for Congress.

KLEIN was press secretary and special assistant to Nixon, then the vice president, in 1959 and 1960. Klein then went back to San Diego only to return in 1962 as press secretary for Nixon's losing race for governor of California.

Klein was communications manager for Nixon's winning campaign in 1968 and has been White House communications director since the president's inauguration the following January.

Some Washington newsmen believe Klein is trying to undercut them with their publishers and readers and they resent it. Klein brushes aside such complaints.

"THERE IS no question they (the news media) need representation in Washington," Klein said. "The wire services are covering stories and very well in my opinion. But it is important for people outside Washington to have a chance to ask me questions."

He also said his trips give him a chance to read the mood of the nation.

"You don't really know what the country is thinking if you only stay here," he said.

IT STARTED with a morning news conference. Then he spent an hour with students at Denver University, talking for 10 minutes and answering questions for 50 minutes. He had lunch with top executives of the local newspapers and after lunch taped a question and answer program to be shown on local television that night. Then came a private meeting with some Republican campaign contributors, followed by a dinner speech to the Denver Press Association.

Klein has appeared on radio talk shows in San Francisco, New York and Chicago, answering telephoned questions from listeners. In New York, he appeared two mornings in a row on the "Rambling with Grambling" program which is reported to have one of the largest radio audiences in the nation.

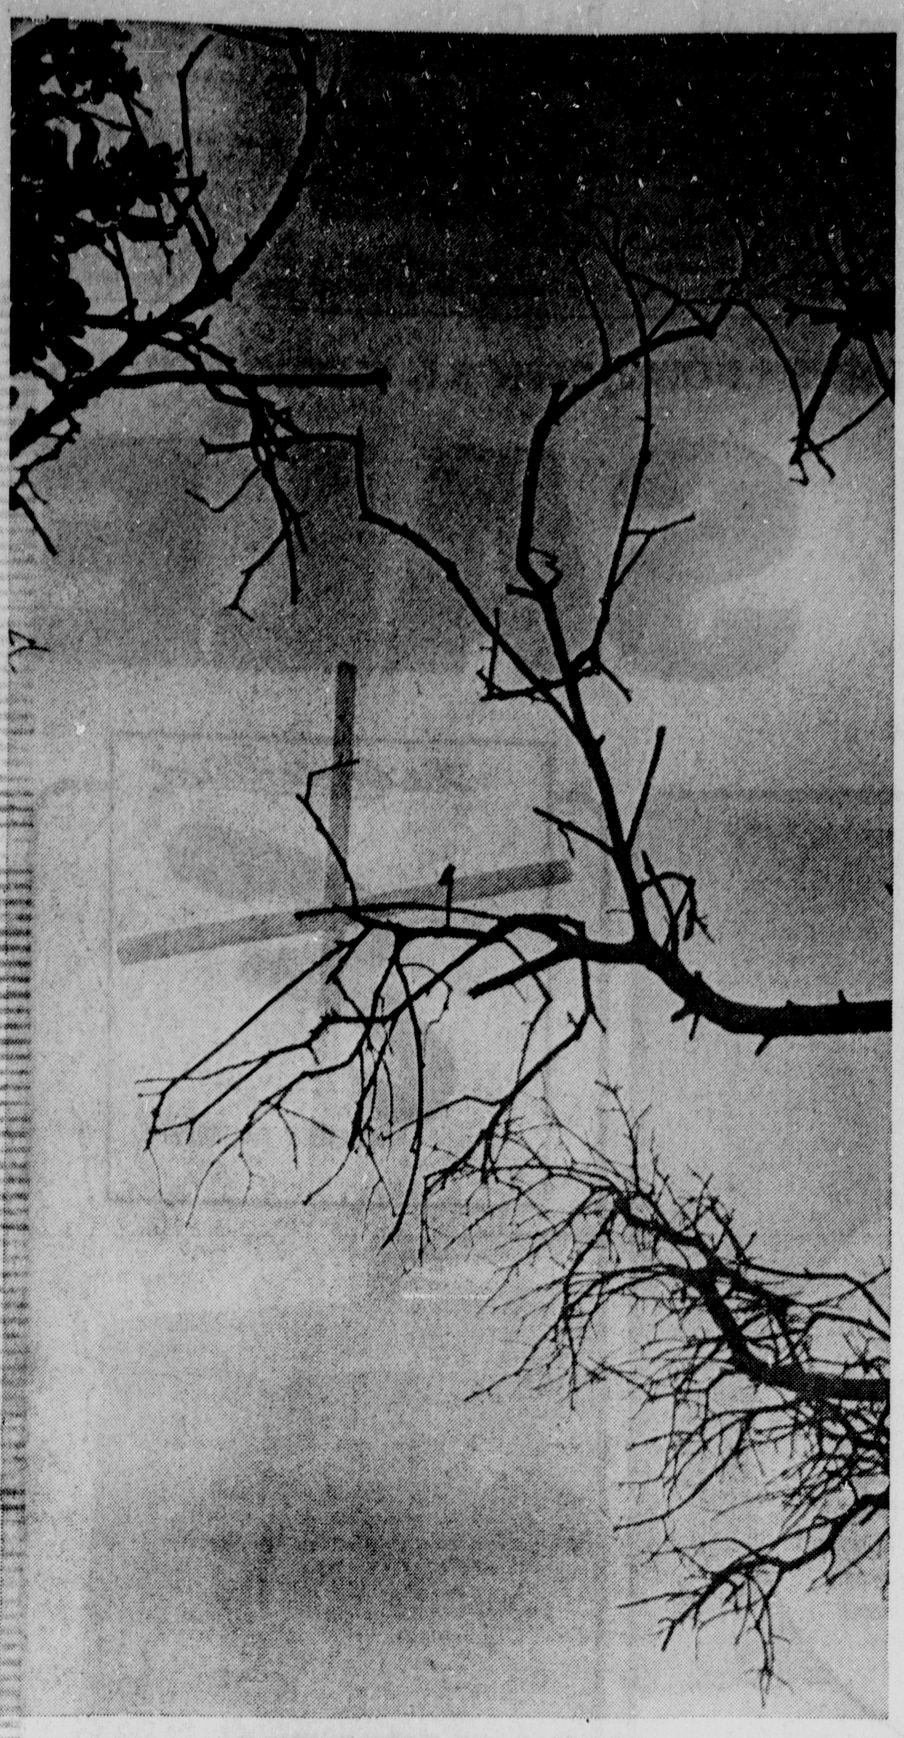

KLEIN SAID he probably will do a few more radio talk shows but will make no attempt to honor each of the 200 invitations he has received for that kind of program.

'LET THERE BE LIGHT'

The sun, something of an unusual sight in Marin County this week, breaks through the damp layer of fog, atop San Rafael Hill — scene of many ecumenical church gatherings on past Easter Day sunrises. The cross is a landmark of the downtown San Rafael skyline. The picture was taken Thursday by Independent-Journal photographer Bob Hax as San Rafael began to partially clear.

IN TODAY'S CHURCH

Women Ministers? It Is Not An Easy Road

By JULIA MALONE
The Christian Science Monitor News Service

BOSTON, MASS. — "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak . . ." — 1 Corinthians 14:34.

Not long ago women were sitting quietly in their pews in Harvard University's Memorial Church. At least, all but one — theologian Mary Daly, who mounted the pulpit as the first woman to preach in the church.

And the rest didn't stay seated long. Dr. Daly ended her fiery sermon by leading them out of the church to protest paternalism and sexism in religion.

Few women, however, direct a church for even as long as Dr. Daly's guest sermon lasted.

Centuries after New Testament times, most churches are still following Paul's advice to the Corinthians. In the United States the United Church of Christ claims the largest number of ordained women ministers of any denomination. Yet it has only 242 women compared to 9,030 men. Some other churches refuse to ordain any women.

If a woman can win the official nod of her church, she still has a tough time locating a congregation. And a lot of women ministers find themselves in the smallest parishes.

When Mrs. Joyce Smith finished divinity school in Chicago, her husband, an economist, told her he would go wherever she could find a church. That was fortunate, since the church (Unitarian) she found was in the quiet country town of Sherborn, Mass.

Larger churches can choose from many candidates. And with the current surplus of Protestant ministers, they have little trouble finding a male minister. When a congregation does pick a woman, it's sometimes only after the church knows her for a period of time.

Rev. Ruth Thompson came to the Baptist Church at Gardner, Mass., with her husband and three children as "interim" minister 17 years ago. Today, she's still there, breaking all their records for a minister's term.

Church members, who seem a bit surprised when reminded that there is anything unusual about their minister, make no secret of their affection for her. "She brought harmony to the church," commented one member.

Added a young deacon: "She takes an attitude toward the church like a woman's about her home. She doesn't count a 40-hour-week."

Since Mrs. Thompson has no "minister's wife," she takes on the wife's traditional duties as well as the pastor's. She attends the ladies' church circle meetings, as the wife would usually do. As pastor, she visits the sick, (She does more visiting than other ministers in town, confided more than one member), counsels at juvenile court, and prepares the weekly sermon.

The minister's husband has not been useless to the Gardner church, however. An ordained minister himself, the Rev. Mr. Thompson spends most of his time on the road for his work with a church fund-raising firm. At times in the past he has filled in at the pulpit when Mrs. Thompson couldn't be there.

REV. MARY DALY
One Of The Few

Local ministers have sometimes had to adjust to their feminine counterpart at First Baptist. Over the years she has watched newcomers arrive at Gardner's United Clergy meetings and "look me over with an expression of 'what have we got here?'" Now she serves as the group's president.

Unlike the Baptist Church, which has ordained women for 80 years, the Episcopalians ordain no women for full priesthood. Episcopalian women are prodding church officials for reform. When the Episcopal Council of Bishops asked for a new study on women and ordination this fall, a group of 60 Episcopal women meeting in Virginia cited four previous studies dating from 1936, and told the Bishops: "We call not for a study but for action."

Already the Episcopal Church is inching toward ordination of women. In 1970 its national convention voted to ordain women deacons. About 35 women are now Episcopal deacons. But practically none of these are in parishes, explained Rev. Susan R. Hiatt, a community organizer at the Philadelphia headquarters of the Episcopal Church and the third woman to be made a deacon.

The Roman Catholic Church, which has in its ranks some of the most radical feminists, including Dr. Daly, shows little sign of changing its male priesthood. And some other churches which do ordain women continue to make ordination an easier step for their men.

Still other churches, including the Religious Society of Friends (Quaker) and the Christian Science Church, have no problem with women's ordination since they do not ordain ministers.

Not all blame for the "males-only" tag on the traditional Christian pulpit belongs to the churches, however. Many trained women prefer not to enter the traditional parish ministry — a life that seems too male, too "authoritarian," for some.

Even ordination doesn't always seem to be a big prize. "It's not worth the hassle," one Ph.D. candidate told a group of women students at Harvard Divinity School. She had applied to be an Episcopal minister.

"I would like to see much less made of ordination," added Janice Risse, another student and a former nun. "As people are more educated, they can look more to one another."

Women with these ideas have to blaze their own career trails once they finish school. They often reject both the "male" and the "female" jobs offered in most churches. At Andover-Newton Seminary in Newton, Mass., senior Davida Foy Crabtree, a vice-president of the National Council of Churches' General Assembly, expects to be ordained by the United Church of Christ. But she's not looking for a pulpit.

"I would like to find a community where the churches are clustering and would hire me as minister of education," she said.

Other women talk about joining team ministries or, more generally, about working in "social change" agencies. But these positions, like the one Mrs. Crabtree has in mind, are few and difficult to find. Consequently, many divinity-school graduates enter fields which have little or nothing to do with their religious training.

Because women can see that theology poses special problems, seminaries and divinity schools are not sprouting new interest in women's courses. In Boston women from several theology schools go to Boston College for Dr.Daly's courses on women and religion. In New York last year Union Theological Seminary held a conference on women and the ministry.

Churches, too, are taking new looks at women. Both the United Presbyterian and United Methodist Churches are preparing studies on women's roles within their denominations. More women are appearing in elected church positions, including the job of moderator of the Presbyterian Church, which is this year held by a woman for the first time.

At Harvard Divinity School, Dean Krister Stendahl, a Lutheran minister, has long taken a stand for women in the ministry, St. Paul notwithstanding. Shortly after he became dean, the school opened its doors to women.

But he admits that there are problems: "I often find it painful to encourage women to take up theological studies. For I know that more often than not, they will come up against types of prejudice and frustrations that I never needed to face . . ."

Little Attention Paid To 'Position Papers'

By LOUIS CASSELS
UPI Religion Writer

Passing resolutions, issuing pronouncements and adopting "position statements" on public issues is a major preoccupation of America's religious bodies.

It occasions much time-consuming debate at meetings of virtually all denominations.

To judge from the vehemence of the battles which sometimes break out at church conventions over the wording of a single sentence in a resolution, one might think these declarations had enormous importance.

Actually, their impact on public policy, as a rule, ranges from very slight to indiscernible.

The amendment's chief sponsor, Rep. Chalmers P. Wiley, R-Ohio, said its sole purpose was to "restore voluntary prayer to public schools."

Most major religious bodies came out strongly against the amendment. They argued it was not necessary in the first place, because the U.S. Supreme Court, contrary to a persistent popular misapprehension, never has forbidden voluntary prayer in public schools or anywhere else. They also contended the amendment was dangerous —that its vague wording might undermine the guarantees of religious freedom and church-state separation already provided in the Constitution.

Although congressmen were well aware that many church bodies opposed the "prayer amendment," they voted 240 to 162 in favor of it when it came to the floor last Nov. 8.

This was 28 votes short of the two-thirds majority required to approve a constitutional amendment —enough to sidetrack the proposal for this year, but a close call.

Most of them found their advice was ignored.

For example: all three major Lutheran denominations spoke out strongly against the amendment. But nine of the 11 Lutherans in the House voted for it.

Baptists, traditionally alert guardians of church-state separation, also vigorously opposed the amendment. But of the 42 Baptists in the House, 27 voted for it, only 10 voted against it, and 5 ducked the issue by not voting either way.

Methodist, Presbyterian and Episcopalian leaders loudly declared their opposition to the amendment and did some personal lobbying on Capitol Hill to make sure members of their denominations understood why the amendment was regarded as a disservice rather than a boon to religion in America.

Result: Methodists in Congress voted for the amendment by a margin of 41 to 17; Presbyterians voted for it by a margin of 45 to 16; and Episcopalians favored it by 25 to 21.

The voting analysis, incidentally, destroyed whatever basis may have been left for the notion once widely held among Protestants that Roman Catholics in Congress are secretly "told how to vote" by the church hierarchy.

FOUR CHURCHES

Schedule For Unity Octave

"The Church Listens, Responds, Celebrates" is the theme of San Rafael's 1972 Unity Octave which will be observed beginning Tuesday through Jan. 25.

The octave, launched 11 years ago, is a joint effort of four San Rafael churches — the First Methodist Church, the First Presbyterian Church, St. Paul's Episcopal Church and St. Raphael's Catholic Church.

The opening ceremony will be held at 7 p.m. Tuesday in St. Raphael's Parish Hall, featuring an agape (a simple meal) and a series of discussions by a Juvenile Hall training officer, a convalescent home social workers and a monther on welfare.

Next Sunday the four churches will observe Octave Sunday with an exchange of "apostles" for the services. Also a blood bank will be set up in the basement of the First Methodist Church Hall between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m.

The closing service will be held at St. Paul's Episcopal Church on Jan. 25 at 8 p.m. It will be a musical night, featuring St. Raphael's Guitar Group, the Westminister and Chancel choirs of the First Presbyterian Church and Rev. Al Price in special selections on St. Paul's new organ.

This year's octave is under leadership of Marin Ford of the First Presbyterian Church.

LECTURER — Alaister G. Smith of San Francisco, a member of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship, will speak at 8 p.m. Monday at the Outdoor Art Clubhouse in Mill Valley. His talk is being sponsored by the First Church of Christ, Scientist of Mill Valley.

Film Set At Auditorium

The film, "Two A Penny" will be shown four times at the Veterans Memorial Building.

A production of the Bill Graham Organization, it is about a wayward youth with vague aspirations to be a mod designer but who is drifting into a life of crime as a dope runner.

Two special showings are scheduled Jan. 30 and 5:30 and 7:30 p.m. and also at 7:30 p.m. Jan. 31 and Feb. 1.

Delegate Picked For Conference

John Miller, 3 Estrella Court, Novato has been selected as a delegate by the Novato Seventh-day Adventist Church to the first annual conference session of the 104 churches of the Northern California Conference of Seventh-day Adventists. The conference will be held at the Elmshaven Church tomorrow at the St. Helens Health Center.

Formerly delegates from the 25,000-member conference met biennally, but at the last session delegates approved a yearly one-day business session.

Missionary Will Speak Tomorrow

Rev. Eugene Bunkowske, missionary to Nigeria, will be guest speaker at tomorrow's 10 a.m. worship service at Grace Lutheran Church in Novato.

His subject will be "Modern Day Missions." Following the service Bunkowske will show slides and hold an informal dialogue session.

Bunkowske, currently on furlough, is a 1960 graduate of Concordia Seminary in St. Louis. From 1961 to 1967 he worked in Yahe, Nigeria. Since 1967 he has been stationed in Okpoma, learning the Yala language and culture.

He is currently engaged in linguistics at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Karel Botermans will offer a new perspective on stress and the ways people try to manage it in his sermon tomorrow at 11 a.m. at the Marin Fellowship of Unitarians, 240 Channing Way, San Rafael.

Guitarist, Wife To Perform At Service

Phillip de Fremmery, noted Bay Area guitarist, and his wife will be featured at tomorrow's 10 a.m. worship service at the Community Congregational Church of Belvedere-Tiburon.

The couple will also perform at a 7 p.m. candlelight concert in the sanctuary.

World Religion Day Will Be Observed

The Baha'i Faith of Marin will observe World Religion Day tomorrow as part of the group's 22nd national observance.

Robert Siegel, a Baha'i missionary, will speak to the group at 7:30 p.m. today at Woodacre Improvement Club as a special kickoff to the observance.

Finch Reported Eying Congressional Seat

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Presidential Counselor Robert H. Finch is considering running for a Los Angeles County congressional seat, a spokesman for the former California lieutenant governor said yesterday. "He is thinking about it but sure hasn't made any decisions," said the spokesman in a telephone interview from Washington.

Finch is interested in running for the seat being vacated by Republican Rep. H. Allen Smith of Glendale. The district also includes Pasadena, where Finch resided before his election as lieutenant governor in 1968.

"This has just happened in the last couple of days," said the spokesman. "He had calls from people in the district suggesting that he run. He's going to wait and see. He hasn't even talked to the President about it yet."

The spokesman said Finch is even more interested in running for an "at large" congressional seat if the California Supreme Court requires candidates to run statewide this year because of the legislature's failure to resolve its reapportionment differences.

Finch, 46, a Republican, resigned as lieutenant governor in January 1969 to become President Nixon's first secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. He resigned from that in June 1970.

Reagan Will Aid Nixon Next Week

Reagan will speak to the Los Angeles County "campaign round-up kick off" Saturday at the Los Angeles Biltmore Hotel.

Ban On New Hospital Beds

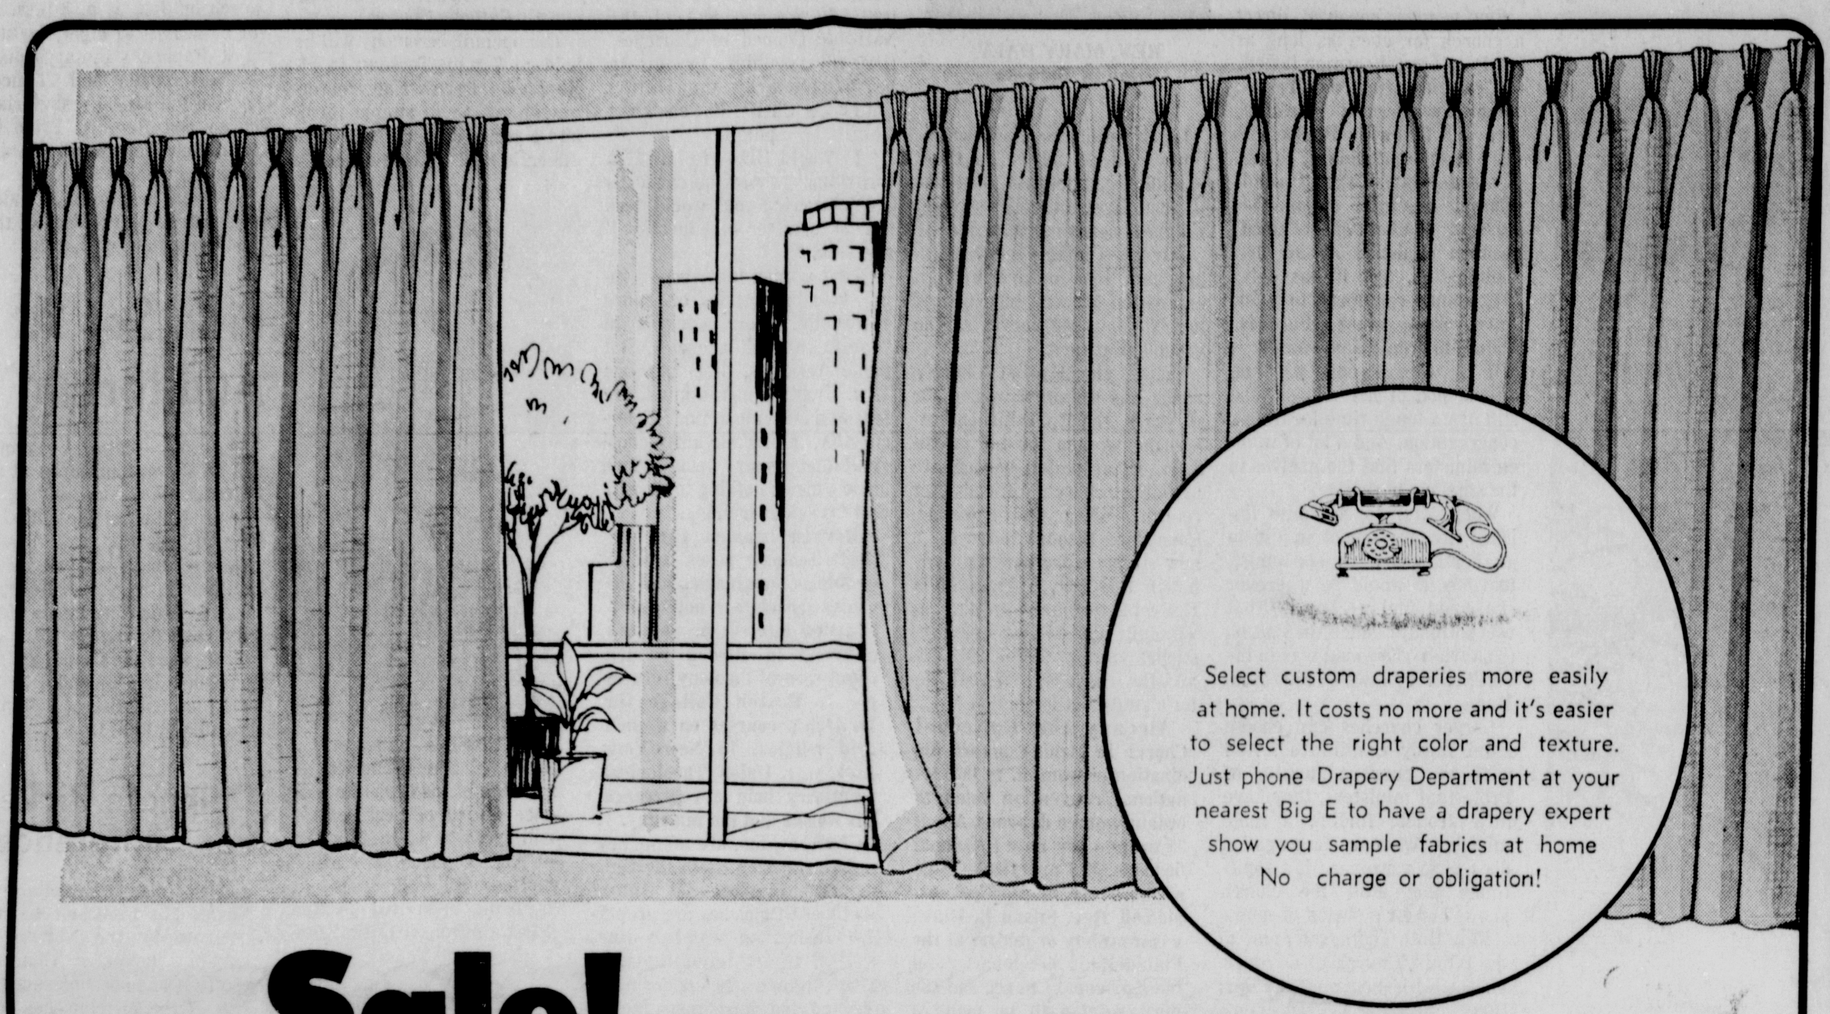

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)— There will be no new bed facilities in the city's hospitals and nursing homes because the city has too much room for its sick people now.

That was the word from the San Francisco Health Planning Council, which Thursday ordered the ban. The group has legal power over the issuance of licenses for new hospital beds.

The ban will not affect projects already under construction, including the county's 585-bed San Francisco General Hospital to be finished in another two years. The ban also does not include federal hospitals.

Profile Of A Marinite

By GEORGE NEVIN

Bob Cummings may be just about the most unlikely revolutionary around.

Then again, he may be no revolutionary at all.

After all, he's white, 61, not poor by any stretch of the imagination, and lives in a luxurious hilltop house in Belvedere. It has been 40 years since he was in college, and he believes fervently in the "American Way."

Although his situation doesn't exactly put him in league with the likes of Che Guevara, the actor, health food advocate, veteran flier and now business associate of cosmetics magnate William Penn Patrick still claims to be a staunch revolutionary.

AFTER MONTHS of attempts to obtain an interview with the personable but always-on-the-go Cummings, the Independent-Journal finally caught up with him during a rare free afternoon at home with his wife and children.

It was here, in his well-appointed living room overlooking Richardson Bay, that Cummings made his revolutionary claim.

Long before the health food movement gained momentum in the late 1960s, Cummings was a rabid advocate of natural foods. On this count alone he could be considered ahead of his time.

LONG BEFORE psychocybernetics and mind dynamics became popular, Cummings lived by a creed he still believes in today: "You can accomplish anything in this universe by acting with all your heart as if it's already an accomplished fact."

He's also a fierce defender of free enterprise, where a man with determination and ingenuity can still become a big success, and to hear him tell it, that trait is his most revolutionary of all.

The word revolutionary, in fact, seems to be one of Cummings's favorites. He uses it to describe his father, mother and boss.

HE MAY HAVE a point in his father's case. The verbal picture Cummings paints of the man, embellished with gestures, dialects, voice inflections and faces, leaves no doubt the parent was truly unique.

There's also no doubt about Cummings's affection for his father. "He was a great man. Gosh, he was a great man," he said, with awe in his voice.

"I didn't learn until I was 18 that my father, who was a physician in Joplin, Mo., was an ex-Jesuit priest," he said. "He also was a 32nd degree Mason, which is astounding when you consider that Roman Catholics aren't allowed to join, secret societies like the Masons."

CHARLES CLARENCE Cummings was at one time studying to be a missionary, Cummings said, and part of the training was a course in first aid.

"My father told me it occurred to him one day that he could be of much greater service to mankind as a doctor than as a minister, so he just put on his hat, walked out of the seminary and enrolled in medical school."

This was just before the turn of the century, and pre-packaged foods were just coming into vogue. "The big thing among food manufacturers became to design a lavish-looking box and fill it full of nothing-at-all which would taste good. Then they could advertise it as thrilling to your tongue," he said with scorn.

THIS TREND infuriated the elder Cummings, and he spent his entire life preaching to Bob about the importance of natural foods.

"Other doctors told him to keep quiet, that he was a purvey-or of medicine, not food, but my father believed in curing people by nutrition."

In 1905 Dr. Cummings decided that a government bureau should be created to protect people from nutritionally worthless food and additives.

"He and another doctor sat down and wrote the legislation that led to the creation of the Food and Drug Administration," said Cummings.

BUT AS FATE would have it, this feat did not turn out as planned.

"Somewhere in Congress, the name got changed to the Pure Food and Drug Act," Cummings said. "My father was furious. 'Nothing in nature ever comes pure,' he stormed. 'Food can be natural, but never pure.'"

Cummings said his father drummed nutrition into his head when he was a boy until "I was sick of hearing him spout off." But it paid off in later years, although Cummings was slow to learn this.

WHEN HE GOT to college, Cummings rebelled against his father's teachings and began eating in the university cafeteria. "That's when I developed my first cavities," he remembered.

He complained to his father that his college classmates ridiculed his eating habits, but Dr. Cummings only said, "Let people make fun of you. You'll be here long after they're gone."

"You know, he was right," said Cummings. "I've been called a food addict, a food nut, a faddist and a vegetarian, even though I'm none of those. But it's sad to say that many of the people who scorned my diet are dead now."

CUMMING'S MOTHER, too, was unique in her way. She was a Protestant minister and her marriage to a Catholic raised eyebrows in both families.

"Both my parents were backstage in religion, so to speak, and they had seen that it's not all whipped cream," said Cummings. They imparted in him a healthy skepticism of religion, he said.

For a man of 61, Cummings looks remarkably fit. His face is largely untouched by the years. He isn't overweight and his diet and busy life appear to agree with him.

He is, however, prone to minor back trouble, and excused himself soon after the interview began.

"YOU AREN'T easily shocked, are you?" he asked, somewhat rhetorically, then lay down on the gold shag carpet while his wife, the former Regina Marina Fong, whom he married last year, walked barefoot up and down his spine.

"It really feels great when she does that," he said, standing up again. His blue shirt and slacks were unwrinkled by their ordeal.

Bob Cummings Claims Title Of Revolutionary

From Unusual, Self-Reliant Parents Came An Unusual, Self-Reliant Man

tion and you're likely to be answered with an anecdote.

"Is your name really Bob Cummings" is such a question. Obviously, it wouldn't do to answer with, "No, it's Charles Clarence Robert Orville Sister Mary Alphonsus Cummings Jr." and let things go at that.

THERE'S A story behind Cummings's full name, and he delights in telling it:

"When I was born in 1910, my father and mother had a disagreement over what to name me, with my mother wanting me to be Charles Clarence Cummings Jr. and my father holding out for Robert Orville."

Dr. Cummings filled out the birth certificate, but when the head of the hospital, Sister Mary Alphonsus, showed it to Cummings' mother, she decided to change it.

SHE WROTE "Charles Clarence Cummings Jr." on the birth certificate but neglected to cross our the original name. Sister Mary then signed as a witness.

It wasn't until 1930 that Cummings discovered his legal name, through a mixup, was recorded as Charles Clarence Orville Sister Mary Alphonsus Cummings Jr.

"So I just decided to call myself Bob," he said.

Cummings likes to talk about his early days in the theater, when only 23 shows were running on Broadway, acting jobs were impossible to find and actors were starving in New York.

IT WAS THE height of the depression and Cummings, who attended acting school on a scholarship, dropped out but couldn't find work.

In desperation, he signed on a ship as a waiter and worked his way to England, where he bought a motorbike and toured the countryside.

He had been told by a Britisher in New York that the American theater was desperate for young English actors, so Cummings acquired a gray flannel suit, an English accent, a phony story about being reared in India, a pseudonym and some photographs of a British theater marquee with his name prominently featured.

Back in New York Cummings found work immediately, and soon was making $1,000 a month doing plays and radio shows and appearing in the Ziegfeld Follies.

THEN THE demand for English actors faded and Cummings found himself in Hollywood, where the only acting work was for Texans. So, chameleon-like, he became a Texan.

With a cowboy outfit, a fake drawl and a fabricated story about his past in San Angelo, Tex., he managed to land a role in a Western, and his film career was on.

He's now made 111 films, produced and starred in four television series and appeared in too many stage productions and on too many radio programs to count.

CUMMINGS'S VOICE takes on a defensive tone when he speaks of William Penn Patrick, the San Rafael millionnaire and chairman of the board of Holiday Magic Inc., where Cummings now works.

"Lots of people hate Bill Patrick, but they're wrong. They call him a rightist, but Bill just believes in the free enterprise system. They say he ran for governor because he wants power, but we need leaders like him.

"He's not for the establishment; he's for the right of a person to go into business and make a success of himself. He's the kind of American we need. He's a pioneer. He's got guts and spirit."

Cummings said he and Patrick share the same philosophy of success, although Cummings didn't realize it until a year ago when he came to Patrick to talk about financing a film.

"WE WERE sitting in his office talking," said Cummings, "and finally Bill said, 'I want you for my company.' I said, 'You mean for the film' and he said, 'No I want you to work for Holiday Magic and I want to pay you a lot of money.'"

Cummings found he couldn't turn down an offer like that.

Unknown to him at the time, Cummings said, was that Patrick had been one of the top distributors of Nutri-Bio vitamins many years ago when Cummings was part owner of the company.

Patrick had attended several of Cummings's pep talks made to distributors, and found that Cummings's anything-is-possible philosophy matched his own.

WHEN CUMMINGS joined Nutri-Bio, its sales were $75,000 a month. Fifteen months later they had skyrocketed to 10 million dollars per month, said Cummings. Six months later, however, after a government investigation into the company, it went bankrupt.

Patrick never forgot Cummings and his success formula, though.

Cummings's wife, whom he calls Gigi, is of Chinese and Portuguese ancestry, and they have a small son, Charles Clarence Cummings III.

Mrs. Cummings also has a daughter, Michelle, 8, by another marriage, and Cummings has five grown sons and daughters by a previous marriage.

FOR A MAN whose godfather was Orville Wright, it's not surprising that Cummings has been captivated by flying for many years.

He took his first solo flight in 1927 and at one time was a flight instructor. He also flew many of the planes seen on "The Bob Cummings Show," one of television's biggest grossing situation comedy series.

One of Cummings's latest projects — when he's not working on a film, publicizing Holiday Magic or promoting his own brand of natural vitamins — is the Bob Cummings Thrill-O-Rama air circus.

Ten vintage planes, all owned by Patrick, will be flown to various air shows throughout the West and rides offered to the curious, he said.

ADMISSION TO the show will be free: "We'll get nothing out of it except goodwill."

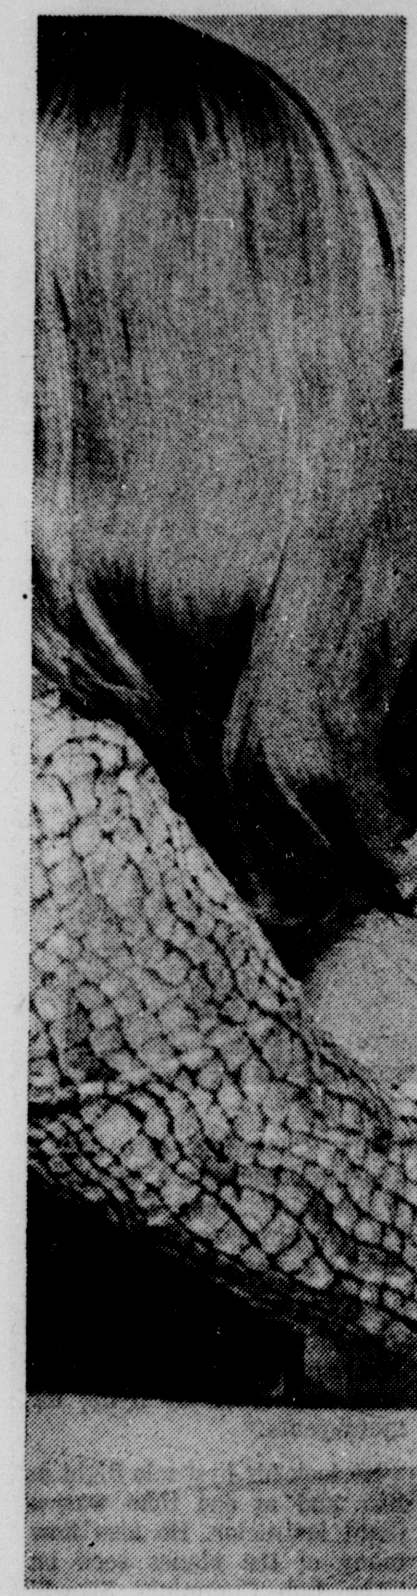

"You know a lot of people have asked my why I gave up my show business career to join Holiday Magic," said Cummings, "but I haven't given anything up. I'm still free to do films, and as for the business promotion, I love it."

A Brighter Future For Little Meredith

Not too many years ago the blonde, blue-eyed youngster might have been doomed to lead an entirely different life — a lonely one in an institution. Meredith is a mongoloid.

Meredith is that one in every 600 children born a "mongoloid."

THE VERY TERM might conjure up a frightening picture of animalistic Mongol hordes bent only upon destruction.

The name, "mongolism," merely describes the facial appearance of these children. They have slightly slanted eyes and a flat bridge of the nose.

Parents of children with this adverse genetic abnormality understandably prefer the less frightening medical term, "Down's Syndrome," after the doctor who first described the disorder.

ALTHOUGH Down's Syndrome has been with us for a very long time, only a little more than a decade ago was it discovered that the majority of these children have an extra chromosome, a part of the cell nucleus.

As society became more understanding of the problems of mental retardation, we began to face the problem in a more intelligent manner. Rather than put their Down's Syndrome children in an institution, parents began keeping them at home.

It soon became apparent that, because of the love and attention these children received at home, they were doing better than children who weren't with their families.

BUT THESE pioneering parents took on a tremendous job of learning how to care for, and teach children with marked degrees of mental and physical retardation.

Development is slower than normal. As infants, Down's Syndrome children are "floppy." Instead of sitting up at the age of seven months, they may not do this until they're well over a year old.

The degree of retardation varies widely. One of the objections to the harsh old, now discredited and largely discarded term, "mongolian idiot," is that the majority of these children are not in the idiot class (I.Q. of up to 24). The highest I.Q. attained is usually in the range of 65 to 70.

WHEN MEREDITH was born at Marin General Hospital on Jan. 8, 1969, her pediatrician, Dr. Royce Truex, member of the Marin County March of Dimes Medical Advisory Committee, suspected Down's Syndrome. He immediately told Mary and Tom Lloyd of his suspicion. Three days after birth X-rays were taken of Meredith's hip. These showed a hip connection present in only 10 per cent of normal children, but characteristic of Down's Syndrome.

Six weeks later Tom and Mary Lloyd brought Meredith to the March of Dimes-sponsored Genetic Evaluation and Counseling Clinic at Ross General Hospital for confirmation of Dr. Truex's diagnosis.

Clinic directors Dr. Charles Epstein and Dr. Donna Daentl traced Tom and Mary Lloyd's family trees back through two generations. This genetic investigation indicated Meredith's problem was not inherited.

AS CHROMOSOMES can be seen and identified under a microscope, a "chromosome analysis" was made on a sample of Meredith's blood. It revealed she had the extra chromosome particular to Down's Syndrome.

Dr. Epstein was able to tell the Lloyd's that Meredith's Down's Syndrome was caused by an accident of nature called Trisomy 21.

Until recently this accident was thought to occur usually in births to women over 40 years of age. A recent medical study, however, shows the curve for mothers of Down's Syndrome children has a single, practically level plateau from ages 30 to 40.

MARY LLOYD was only 30 when Meredith was born. For some unknown reason her two chromosomes of Pair 21 failed to reduce properly during the reproductive process. As normally, only one of each pair of chromosomes is contributed to the child by each parent, Meredith was born with a total chromosome count of 47 instead of the normal 46 — the 23 contributed by her father at conception having been joined by 24 in the abnormal, extra chromosome egg produced in the mother's body.

Trisomy (three instead of two) is the most common cause of Down's Syndrome and is usually not inherited. There are two other causes of Down's Syndrome, Mosaicism, which is not inherited, and Translocation, which can be.

Medical studies now indicate that mothers exposed to X-rays have a 50 per cent greater chance of having children afflicted with Down's Syndrome. Much research into the disorder is being carried on at the March of Dimes built and supported Salk Institute in La Jolla, Calif. Progress in the prevention of Down's Syndrome can be made only after clear identification of the cause or causes.

WHEN DR. Truex's diagnosis was confirmed at the Genetic Clinic, the Lloyds faced the next step. Mary Lloyd recalls, "When Meredith came home from the hospital a lot of our friends came to see us, but didn't know what to say. It was as though somebody had died, there weren't any words. They felt it didn't do any good for them to say, 'I'm sorry.'

"But this baby was a human being who needed care and love, just like a normal child. We weren't sorry. We found that the best way was to broach the subject right away to break the barrier — to say the word, mongolism, or Down's Syndrome.

"A lot of our friends had never heard the term, Down's Syndrome, before, but they all knew what a mongoloid was.

"SINCE THEN a lot of them have said, 'Gee, we're amazed that Meredith functions so well!' I probably would have said the same thing. People expect the institutionalized, retarded person who can't do anything but make gutteral sounds.

"Their picture of mongolism is probably a lot like mine was at one time."

The Lloyds had the good fortune of having Meredith's problem diagnosed right away. They didn't have to face the heartbreak of thinking she was normal and later learning she was not.

"IT'S A HARD blow," observed Mary Lloyd, "but you learn to accept it and live with it and go from there. We were lost as to how best to care for Meredith. She was our first baby and I didn't even know how to take care of a normal baby — much less a Down's Syndrome baby. We got over that lost feeling though, when we found there was somebody out there to help us."

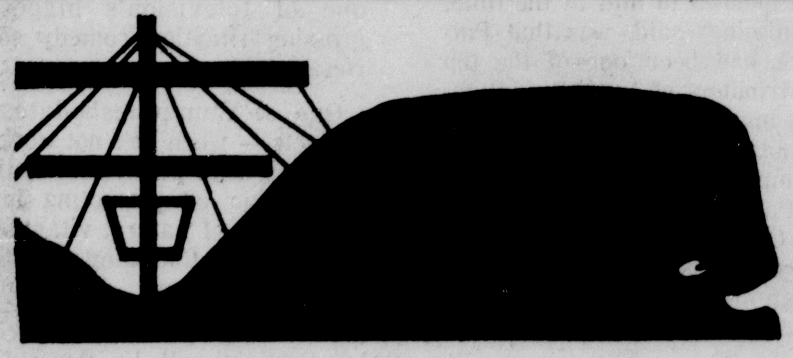

Until 1969 there was no infant program in Marin County and perhaps no more than two in the entire country. But there was a county schools program for mentally retarded children who were from 3 to 5 years old, directed by Mary Ann Newcomb.

Parents of children too young for the county program asked Mary Ann Newcomb to see if something similar could be done for their children. This dedicated woman organized and trained a volunteer group and developed a program for children under 3 years of age. To get away from the mentally retarded concept Mary Ann Newcomb named the program, "Atypical (meaning not typical) Infant Development Program."

A PARENT'S plea, "I have a new Down's Syndrome baby; can you help me?" was answered for the first time.

The program quickly grew to the point where volunteers could no longer meet the demand. Mrs. Newcomb took the concept to what is now Marin County Health Services. There it was officially funded, 90 per cent by Short-Doyle funds and 10 per cent by the county, in July of 1969.

Although children can be referred to the AID program by anyone, pediatricians are now the main source of referral. Any child whose development is delayed for any reason, either confirmed or suspected, is eligible for the program.

SOME OF THE AID children are blind or have cerebral palsy. Others have growth defects or undiagnosed problems which slow down their development. Children with Down's Syndrome are probably the largest single classification in the AID program.

Dr. Virginia Apgar, vice president of medical affairs for the National Foundation - March of Dimes, recently quoted a government estimate of the cost of caring for such children. "By 1975, the care of mongoloids will cost the United States one billion, 750 million dollars, at least."

According to Susan Collins, director of the A Typical Infant Development Program, ' It is cheaper to keep these children at home, and better for them. If the state wants the parents to keep the Down's Syndrome child in their homes, then the state must provide programs of this sort."

OBVIOUSLY THIS cost can only be reduced through availability of a growing number of infant programs which provide continuing education for children until the age of 3. After that age there are a number of programs available in the community.

Susan Collins stresses that children in the AID program are seen individually at first and until the staff feels that the child has reached a developmental stage so that he can be seen in a group and still be kept functioning and progressing at his maximum level of development.

Mary Lloyd recalls the first time AID volunteers visited Meredith: "Helen Engh, a registered public health nurse, Mrs. Jeanie Blom, a physical therapist connected with the program, and the director, Mary Ann Newcomb, came to the house about three weeks after I got home from the hospital.

"THEY TOLD ME about the program and it was difficult for me to comprehend it all. I was trying not to think about the situation, even though I realized I was faced with it and had to do something."

"At first two volunteers from the program came each week to show Tom and me what we must do with Meredith to stimulate her," Mary Lloyd continues. "They had us do things like swing Meredith in a blan-

WHAT LOOKS LIKE a romp through the obstacle course with her tutor, Susan Collins, at the Atypical Infant Development School in Kentfield is also a very important part of her special training for 3-year-old Meredith Lloyd as she struggles, with expert and compassionate assistance, against the handicap of Down's Syndrome. Much of the equipment was purchased with March of Dimes money. And little Meredith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Lloyd, is the paster girl for Marin County's 1972 March of Dimes campaign.

AT THE March of Dimes-sponsored Genetic Evaluation and Counseling Clinic at Ross General Hospital, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Lloyd meet with the clinic directors, Drs. Donna Daentl and Charles Epstein, for a conference. ket. This was to stimulate the inner ear so she could learn where her head was and eventually learn balance.

"They had me take her off a bottle at nine months, earlier than most normal children."

"THEY HELPED ME with so many things," Mary Lloyd remembers," and now Meredith walks and runs and does so many things the way normal 3-year-olds do.

"Sue Collins is now making Meredith pick up little things with her fingers to develop dexterity. She's also working with her on speech. Even though Meredith says words she doesn't speak much."

Meredith arrives at the Atypical Infant Development School, located at 1030 Sir Francis Drake Boulevard in Kentfield — site of the old Ross Valley Clinic — about 9:30 each morning.

SHE RUNS THE "obstacle course," an enjoyable form of physical therapy. Then the curious toddler plays with brightly colored toys from the corner bookcase with other children in the program. Much of the equipment used was purchased with a gift from the Marin March of Dimes.

Then comes a tutoring session where Meredith learns to stack one wooden block on top of another.

From the time the child is first seen, and every six months thereafter, children in the AID program are tested with "the Denver." The Denver Developmental Screening Test simply lists the skills the child should acquire in the order in which he should acquire them.

AS MISS COLLINS describes it, "The test is given not so much to assess the progress of the child in terms of months, but more to let us know what the child can now do and let us know the next thing we should teach him.

"Once Meredith can build a tower of two blocks, we would start to teach her how to build one out of four blocks."

Juice time is, of course, a favorite with the children who drink from their cups with varying degrees of ability. Then the children and instructors sing gay little tunes which teach how to count or to identify parts of their bodies.

THE DAY ENDS with lunch, an important part of the program. Correct chewing and swallowing are crucial speech-related activities as well as a vaulable social accomplishment.

Children in the AID program are happy and busy learning. An occasional wail is hushed with a matter-of-fact, "No crying, I'm sorry."

When Meredith had been in the AID program for two years, her mother again became pregnant. Although it appears that Meredith's Down's Syndrome is not inherited, parents of such a child may have a higher risk of having another child with some type of abnormality.

MANY NEW techniques have been developed recently in the field of diagnosing defects or diseases of unborn children through analysis of fetal cells in the amniotic fluid — the clear, amber liquid in which the baby swims before birth. The cells in the fluid represent those of the baby, and a chromosomal analysis can be done on them.

The process of obtaining a sample of the amniotic fluid through a long hollow needle is called amniocentisis.

On the advice of her doctor, Mary Lloyd decided to have the amniotic tap done. The test was made by Dr. Epstein at the University of California Medical Center in San Francisco — part of a program funded by the National Foundation — March of Dimes.

MARY LLOYD was the 26th woman to utilize this service of the March of Dimes since it was funded in January of 1970. As a result, the Lloyds were assured they were to be the parents of a normal boy. Meredith's brother, Thomas Peyton Randolph Lloyd, was born in November.

New Program Offers Hope For Those With Children Afflicted By Dreaded 'Mongolism'

As to Meredith's future, Mary Lloyd says, "I haven't really thought too much about that because I think you really have to take one day at a time. If you try to think about the future and the fact that your child probably won't marry and have children, you get lost. You can only take one day at a time and face those problems. Time will have to take care of the rest.

"A lot of schools in Marin have classes for the trainable and teachable mentally retarded. I hope Meredith gets into the teachable class, as it is higher."

MEREDITH "graduates" from the AID school this month and will be going to the Marin County Schools Department's Forest Meadows Development Center on the Dominican College campus in San Rafael. When she is of school age Meredith will be tested to see what school program is best for her. With the headstart she received through the AID program, she may even be able to attend classes at Wolfe Grade School near her home.

As to the future of Down's Syndrome children in general, thanks to medical advances, they may now live an almost normal life span. Nearly half used to die before the age of 5 of pnekmonia, heart disease and leukemia.

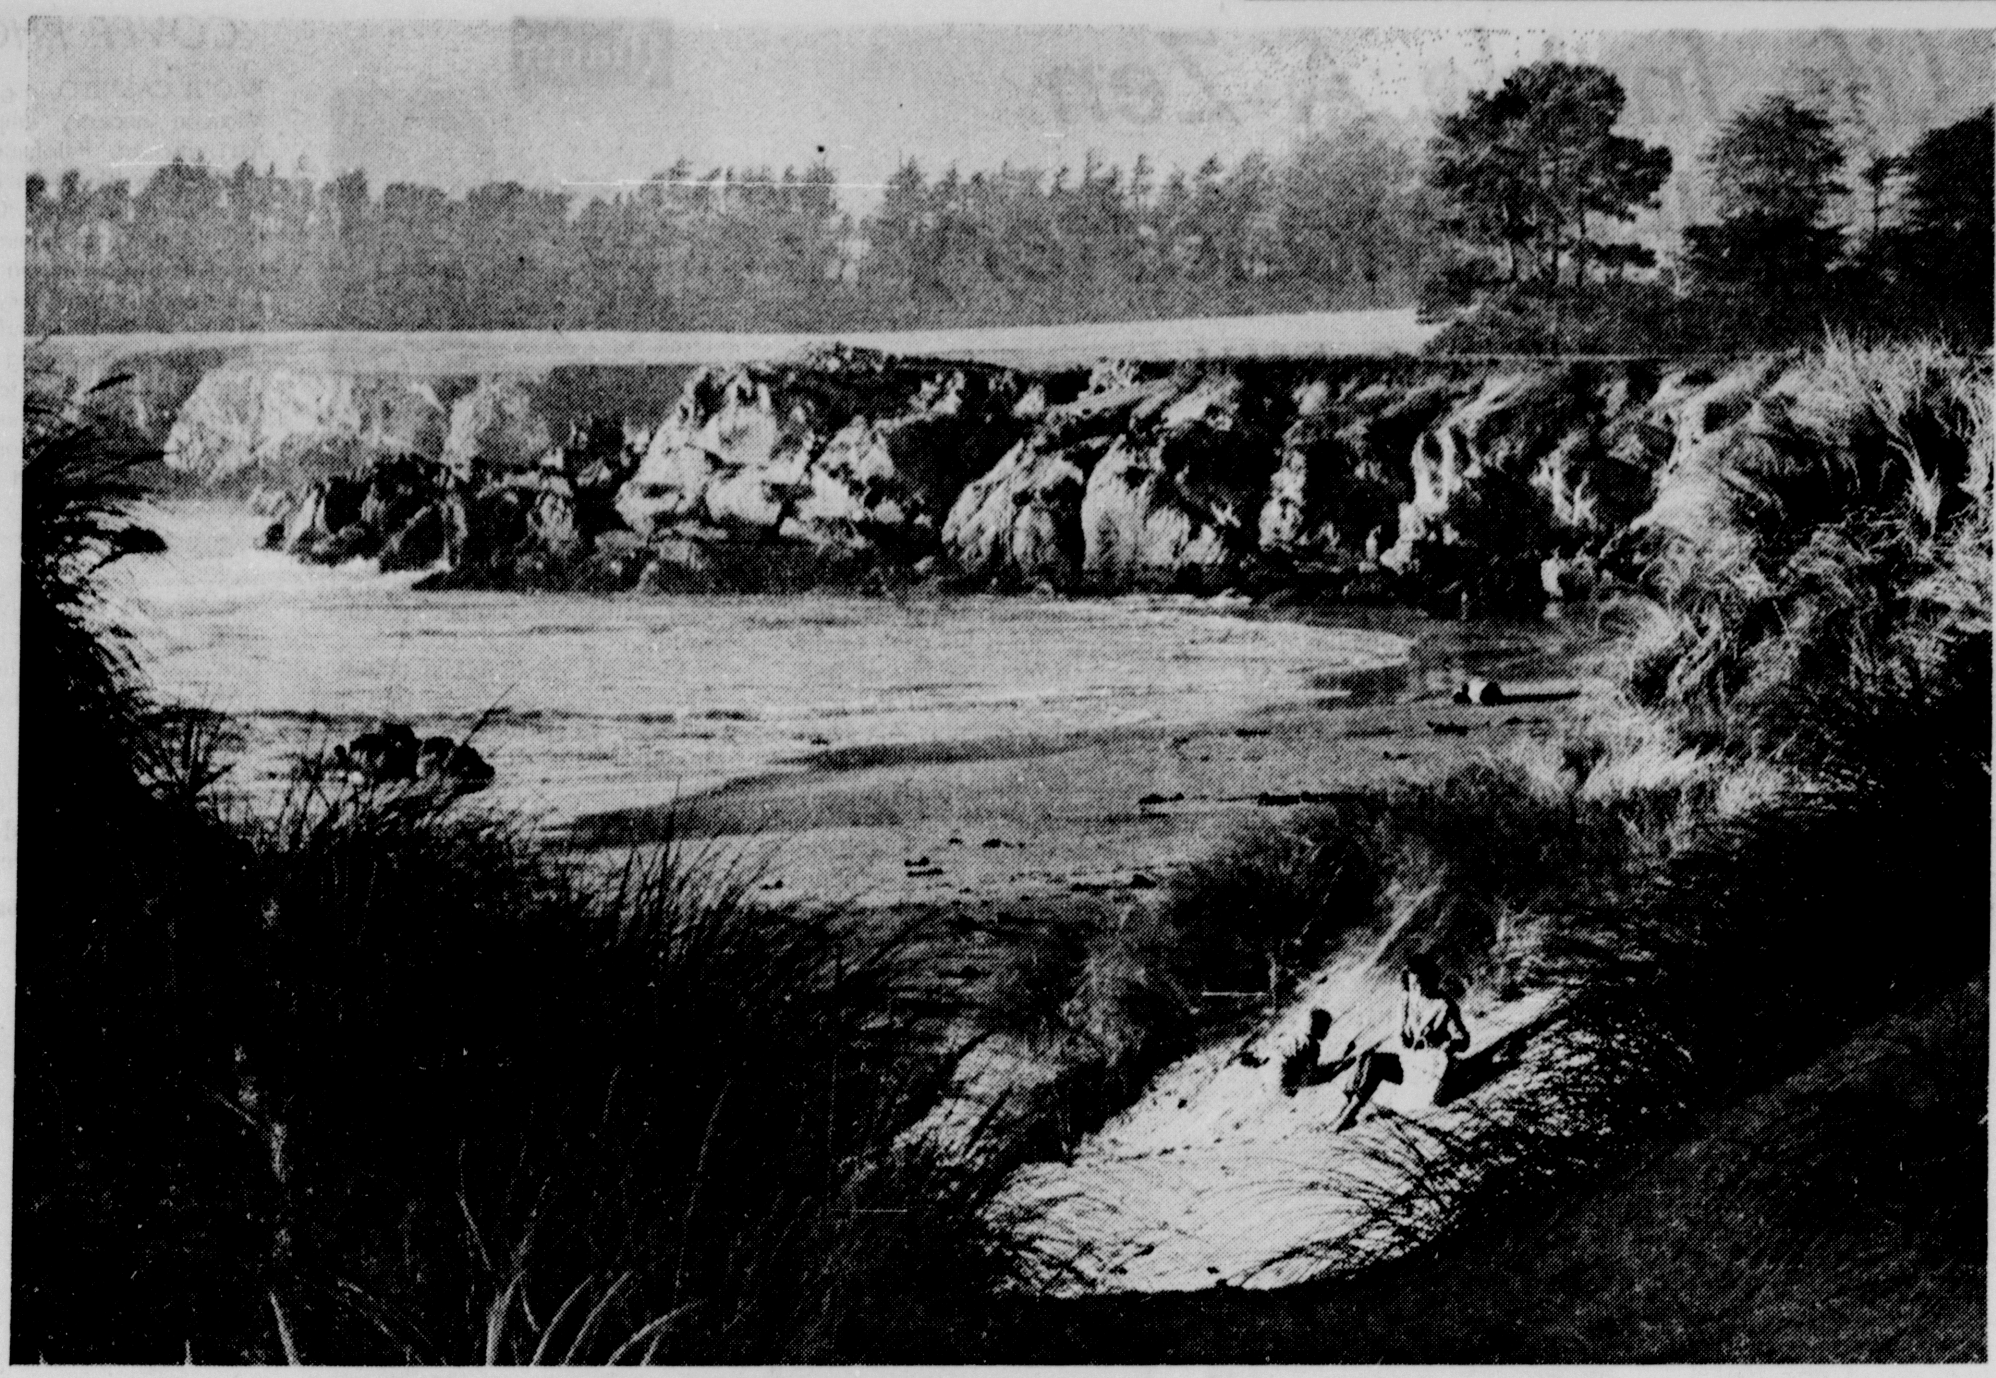

Day-care centers are increasing and can provide continuing education for the child. When these children become adults, they can be trained to do many minor unskilled tasks. They may live at home or together in a supervised, non-institutionalized setting with their peers.

MEREDITH'S father, Tom Lloyd, currently serves as chairman of the Facilities Review Committee of the Coordinating Council for Mental Retardation in Marin, working to find housing for the mentally retarded.

There is a satisfaction for the Lloyds in knowing that they are not only meeting their own responsibilities, but helping others, too, to a more pleasant, happier existence.

Life Inside A Zen Buddhist Monastery

Raoul Castillo Is Only Westerner To Have Lived And To Have Studied Inside Kongo Sect's Shorin Temple

By DON KEOWN

Raoul Castillo, 39, is a humble man of humble origins. But he has done something no other westerner has done.

A gardener, employed by the city of Petaluma, and the son of parents born in Mexico, his father a Richmond factory worker, Castillo has lived, studied and trained in the centuries-old Shorin Temple of the Kongo Zen sect of Buddhism on the Japanese island of Shikoku for nearly a year, preparing himself for the life of a Buddhist monk.

No other non-Oriental has ever been admitted for study in that monastery.

ALTHOUGH HE had to abandon temporarily his training for the monkhood when he had nearly attained his goal, Castillo is a brother of one of Buddhism's most unusual and most respected 76,000-plus Zen sects. And he plans to return to Shorin Temple to complete his training and attain ordination.

The Kongo Zen sect is distinguished in two ways, explains this quiet-spoken but earnest and articulate brother of the order.

First, by its steadfast adherence to the principle that a man's faith and beliefs are ever lasting — "you follow your beliefs forever." The word "kongo" means "diamond," Castillo explains, "in other words, something hard, sound and permanent."

A second distinctive feature of Kongo Zen is its interest in and devotion to "the martial arts" — karate, ju-jitsu, aikido, boxing, etc.

IT WAS THIS discovery of the unexpected affinity of a religious brotherhood for skills generally considered violent

ONE OF THE features that distinguishes Kongo Zen Buddhism from the some 76,000 other variations of Zen is the emphasis it places upon "kempo" — a term applied to such martial arts as ju-jitsu, karate, aikido and boxing — as a means toward self-discipline and bodily fitness. Monks and students are shown in this autographed photo in furious action, but always with their emotions and their physiques under control. Such training has bben a part of Kongo Zen for centuries, but no westerner had been permitted to study it in the sect's principal training hall in its Shorin Temple untilRaoul Castillo was admitted.

SHORIN TEMPLE, above, is the principal training center for monks of the Kongo Zen Buddhist order, an immaculate if austere building on the Japanese island of Shikoku at Tadotsu. There Raoul Castillo of Petaluma spent nearly a year in rigorous training for the Buddhist monkhood. And it is to Shorin Temple that he will return to complete his studies. At right, inside the temple and at the altar, is So Doshin, the head master and head priest of the monastery. Above him is the "Power and love are one . . ." inscription, and behind him a statue of Daruma, the 28th patriarch in line from Buddha and the first Zen patriarch in China. He taught monks a system of boxing and other martial arts (kempo) that is still taught in Kongo Zen temples today. Below, students inside Shorin Temple are shown engaged in their kempo training. Its interest in the martial arts in one of the distinguishing features of the Kongo Zen sect. For each hour spent in studies and other quieter pursuits, Castillo says, the student is required to spend equal time at more vigorous activities. The photographs are all from Raoul Castillo's personal collection.

and aggressive that opened the doors to Buddhism for Raoul Castillo and ended a serious conflict within him.

That conflict was between a long held enthusiasm for ju jitsu, karate, judo, etc., and a growing interest in the Buddhist religion.

"It had seemed to me that these two interests were opposed to one another and could not be reconciled," he says. "Then I discovered that there was this sect that not only permitted but required that its members be trained and skilled in these martial arts. That eased the conflict within me."

THE KONGO ZEN approach to these so-called martial arts is that they be employed for defensive, or even more importantly peacemaking and peacekeeping purposes, not for aggressive or offensive causes, Castillo explains.

Still more important is the self-discipline they impose upon the man studying and mastering them.

There was nothing in Raoul Castillo's earliest years to indicate that he would feel called to Buddhism. He was born in Richmond, Calif., during the Depression years, the son, as previously stated, of a Mexican-born factory-working father and mother.

"I was baptized a Catholic, but I never attended the church," he says.

HE ATTENDED schools in Richmond, and finished his high school work while in the U.S. Army in the early 1950s.

It was while a soldier, at the time of the Korean conflict, that he was sent to Japan and remained there for four years. He was, he says, much impressed by the serenity that the Buddhist religion seemed to instill in its Japanese followers, and, in fact, by the Japanese way of life in its entirety.

"I felt very much at home in Japan," he says. And while there he picked up more than a smattering of the Japanese language, an accomplishment that was to serve him well in later years.

Back in the United States, Castillo settled down to the life of a San Francisco bus driver. Zen Buddhism virtually forgotten. Not forgotten, however, was an interest in ju-jitsu and similar combative skills that had started in his teen-age years and which he continued to indulge whenever the opportunity presented itself.

THEN, 10 YEARS ago, Castillo began to feel a stirring of renewed interest in the Buddhism with which he had first come into contact in Japan.

"Until that time I simply did not have any religion of my own," he says.

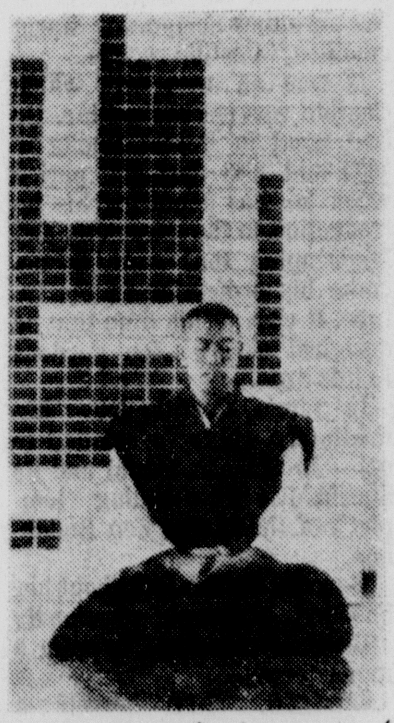

He began reading extensively on the subject — "I think I must have covered every available American anthology on Buddhism," he says.

And he began visiting the Buddhist temple in San Francisco's Chinatown for Sunday lectures, and attending Buddhist training halls.

THIS WENT ON for five years and the more he learned of Zen Buddhism the stronger grew his realization that it was the closest religion he had yet encountered to his own personal beliefs. Still, he was troubled by what seemed to him an irreparable conflict between his enthusiasm for the so-called martial arts and the gentleness and tranquility that are emphasized in Zen Buddhism.

Then one day while Castillo

Zen Buddhism With An Affinity For The Martial Arts

was studying in a San Francisco Buddhist training hall, a monk newly arrived in this country visited the place. Castillo, employing his Japanese, fell into a conversation with the monk. He learned for the first time of the existence of the Kongo Zen sect that not only saw the martial arts as harmonious to a religious life, but even as essential to it.

Intrigued, Castillo invited this monk and his two companions, also just arrived from Japan, to live in his home while they were in the Bay Area.

"AND THAT," HE says, "changed the course of my entire life."

Not only did Castillo gain a new enlightenment upon the Zen Buddhist religion and a strengthening of his interest in it, through these monks, but one of them also introduced him to the young woman who was to become his wife.

She was Chieko Yoshikawa, a Japanese girl who had come to the United States to study English.

After their marriage, the Castillos took a brief trip to Europe. But Raoul Castillo had already decided that his future lay with Zen Buddhism, and that to realize it he would have to go to the Orient. Before they left for Japan, however, Raoul took his bride on an extensive tour of California, not just to see the sights but also to select the area where they would make their home when they returned to the USA from Japan.

"WHEN WE HAD finished, Chieko said she would like to live in either Sonoma or Marin counties," Castillo recalls.

It was an area with which Castillo was not unfamiliar. He had lived in Forest Knolls in 1962 and 1963 during a period when he was acquiring his introduction to the gardening and landscaping that were to become his profession in the future. It was at this time that he designed several Zen gardens in this area.

In Japan, Castillo knew immediately where he wanted to go — to Shikoku Island and its Shorin Ji ("ji" meaning "temple") of the Kongo Zen Buddhists.

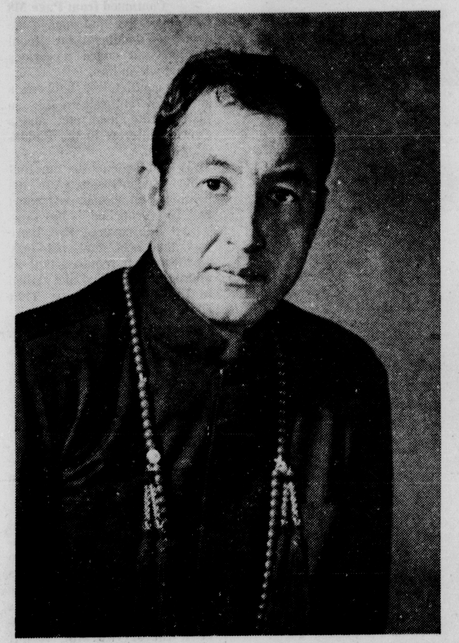

How did Chieko feel about her husband planning, so shortly after their marriage, to enter a monastery?

CHIEKO, NOT herself a Buddhist, agreed, says Raoul, that he should do that which he felt he had to do, knowing "that it would be better for us in the long run if I fully realized and experienced the faith that was drawing me to it."

Castillo adds: "The historical Buddha, you know, left his wife and child in order to seek enlightenment."

So one day in 1970 Castillo appeared at the principal temple of the Kongo Zen sect, "already thinking of myself as a Buddhist, but not realizing just how weak a Buddhist I was then."

Castillo learned quickly that he had gone about gaining admission to Shorin Temple in the wrong way.

RAOUL CASTILLO says he left the Kongo Zen temple on Shikoku Island "aware of just how ill prepared I was for monastery life," but that, better prepared, he will return and complete his training so as to be ordained as a Buddhist monk.

"IN THE FIRST place, no westerner had ever been admitted for study," he says. "In the second place you do not call at the temple and demand or even ask for acceptance. The temple sends for you.

"Furthermore, it was the practice to send students who were accepted to smaller training halls for extensive preparation before they were even admitted to Shorin Temple." The main temple maintained a "faculty" of but six monks, limiting its students to 80.

Castillo was rejected and told that there was a long waiting list of applicants from throughout Japan who had been instructed to go instead to their nearest Zen training hall.

But "not realizing how unreasonable I was being," Castillo returned again and again to the main temple, begging for acceptance as a student.

IN THE MEANTIME he had found a Zen master in an isolated but not too distant village under whom he was studying.

It was this teacher who encouraged him to continue his persistent campaign for admittance to the temple, telling Castillo that although he was a westerner "you are just as much a Buddhist as anyone of us."

Castillo notes here: "There is a Buddhist term — bussho — that means everybody is half Buddhist. Thus there is really no non-Buddhist."

But finally even the determined Castillo was exhausted by his unsuccessful campaign to enter the Kongo Zen monastery. He made one last call upon its head master, the venerated So Doshin, and repeated the words his own Zen teacher had said to him. He was in the act of turning to depart Shorin Temple forever when to his astonishment he heard So Doshin tell him to "report tomorrow morning."

THAT WAS IT. Raoul Castillo had won his long campaign. But ahead of him lay a much greater test and ordeal than he had ever imagined.

He was advised at the outset by the sagacious So Doshin that he would be up against certain almost insurmountable handicaps. First and foremost, although he spoke Japanese fluently enough, he was virtually unacquainted with Japanese writing. Furthermore, much of the ancient materials he would be reading would contain words and phrases of special Buddhist or antiquity meanings with which he would be unfamiliar.

Also Castillo was programmed to complete in a single year the training and instruction for which the Japanese students generally required three years before qualifying for ordination as Kongo Zen monks.

NEVERTHELESS Raoul Castillo accepted the challenge, and almost came through. And some day, he is now determined, he will return to Shorin Ji to complete the unfinished work and become an ordained monk. "They are expecting me," he says, "in another three years."

What is life in a Zen Buddhist monastery like?

"Well, not at all like most westerners picture it," answers Castillo. "They imagine it as a place where shaven-headed monks and their students sit around all day with their rice bowls in total silence, just meditating and studying their navels."

There is meditation, Castillo agrees. But there is also much study, and at the Kongo Zen monastery at least much involvement with the very physical martial arts.

"FOR EVERY hour that you spend in quiet or mental activity, you must spend a corresponding hour in vigorous physical activity," Castillo says.

Again he stresses that the extensive training in ju-jitsu, karate, aikido, etc., "is not to make a soldier out of you, but rather to instill in you the self-discipline and to bring forth the self-knowledge that these martial arts develop."

One of the more intimidating aspects of the Kongo Zen temple for the newcomer is the absolute immaculacy and austerity of the building and its gardens.

"I have seen young men arrive, intending to become students, walk through the place, and then just leave, overawed by what they had seen," says Castillo.

TYPICAL, HE says, are the lawns "where every single blade of grass is perfect — no a single one out of place. It is the kind of perfection the western gardener never even hopes to achieve."

But the temple is sparsely furnished and totally unheated. And the schedule of the students is so rigorous that Castillo had only 15 minutes of each day to devote to his own purposes.

Even a bath became a rarety, because baths were taken on a seniority basis. And while Castillo was the oldest in his class of trainees, he was also the junior in time-in-residence, so that the fixed time for baths usually expired before his turn occurred.

THE DIET AT the monastery consisted solely of soup, rice and fish, plus the vegetables grown on the place. There was no meat. Once the eating of meat was avoided as a matter of religious belief, just as leather is still not worn, and as some Zen Buddhist sects still avoid meat. But now, Castillo says, the absence of meat from the menu at Shorin Temple seems to be more a feeling that it is unnecessary to the austere, self-denying life within the monastery.

"Once, when I was away from the temple, I sneaked in a hot dog," Castillo admits.

Every other Sunday Castillo was permitted to visit his wife outside the monstery for a few hours. "But I usually stayed only one hour," he says, "because I was fearful that if I stayed longer, I would not be able to force myself to return."

AND YET, FOR all his dedication, and for his investment of time, study and effort, Raoul Castillo left Shorin Temple approximately one month short of his goal of ordination. Why?

"Because I thought I was dying," Castillo replies simply and honestly.

He explains: "My body temperature had dropped very low, and I was unable to get it up. The hard work and study, the cold and the frugal living took its toll. And the fact that my wife was by then pregnant added to my worries."

The Kongo Sect Sees Ju-Jitsu And Karate As Peacemaking Pursuits That Instill Discipline In Their Practitioners

So Castillo left the temple with the blessing of its head master and with the promise that he will be readmitted three years hence to complete his training, then to remain as long as he feels necessary.

CASTILLO DOES not feel he left the monastery a complete Buddhist or a totally changed man. "Instead I left aware of just how ill prepared I was for monastery life," he says.

He will be better prepared when he returns, he vows.

But if Raoul Castillo was not remade within Shorin Temple, he did learn many new truths about himself and life, and his outlook was altered.

For instance the martial arts with which he had been so long involved took on a new dimension. The Buddhist senseis or teachers taught not just the physical skills involved in jujitsu and karate, but also the philosophy that lies behind them. It is an aspect to which jujitsu, judo and karate students in the West are seldom exposed, he says.

HE CITES AS an example the stance of the participant who swells his chest, flexes his muscles and struts about the mat in an apparnet attempt to intimidate the opposition.

"This is all contrary to the Buddhist teaching that kempo — the Japanese word for these martial arts — should be practiced without any showing of ego, but rather with humility. And yet I have never personally encountered in the United States a single person involved in jujitsu or karate who has even mentioned the word 'ego' or who has discussed this philosophical aspect of the skill that they are teaching."

Even though he plans to return to Japan and to complete his monastery training, Castillo sees gardening as his life-long occupation.

HE IS HAPPY with his city job in Petaluma where he has been working now for some four months. "It was amazing," he says. "I just walked in, and said that I would like to work for the parks department. And they said: 'All right. You have a job.'"

When Castillo returns to Japan and the monastery, his wife and their daughter, Niki, now 9 months old, will go with him to stay with her relatives.

"We want Nikki to learn to speak Japanese," Castillo says, says.

Once ordained as a Kongo Zen monk and having completed his religious studies and preparations, what does Raoul Castillo expect to do with his unusual background?

"MY AMBITION," he replies, "is to translate some of the great Buddhist writing that has never been made available in English. There are literally hundreds of thousands of volumes of Buddhist literature that has not been translated. Indeed, much of it, because of the ancient language and special Buddhist terminology, cannot even be read by the modern Japanese."

Castillo will also lecture and teach Zen Buddhism and the martial arts that play such as major part in the beliefs of the Kongo Zen sect.

His determination to do so was buoyed when in Shorin Temple the scholarly So Doshin told him: "You are the only westerner I have ever met whom I feel to be capable of transmitting Kongo Zen Buddhism to the West."

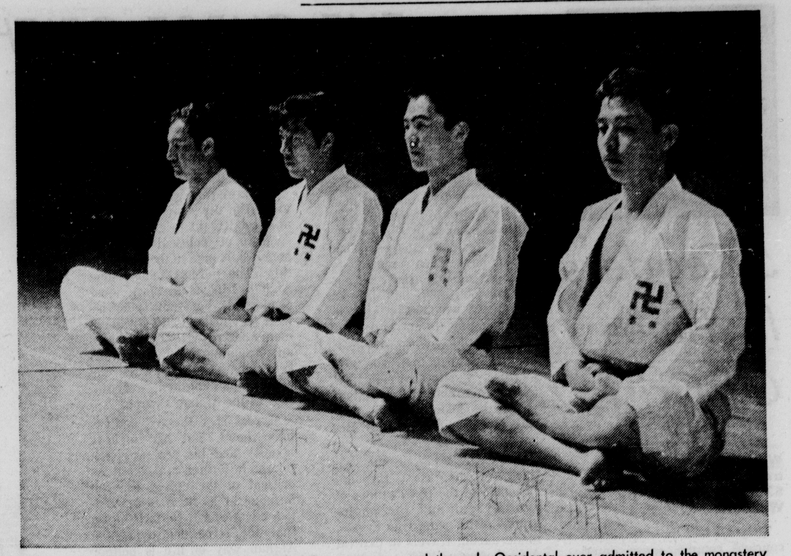

INDEED, CASTILLO is not awaiting the completion of his ordination to begin that work. He is planning a series of lectures that will begin this coming Friday at 7 p.m. at the Musical Barber in the Fair-Anselm Shopping Center, Fairfax, with a talk on "Zen Buddhism in the Martial Arts," and which will also include February lectures at College of Marin and Sonoma State College.

Castillo notes, however, that he will continue to earn his living as a gardener, not as a lecturer, translator or teacher of Zen.

That, he explains, is because his religion will not permit him to charge fees for such activities. "One does not get paid for his religion," Castillo says simply. Thus even the instruction is ju-jitsu and karate which a couple of young men are already receiving from him on an informal basis is provided gratis, since these skills are very much a part of Raoul Castillo's religion.

WHY RETURN to a way of life which Castillo earnestly believes once proved too much for him to endure and brought him to the brink of death?

"Because," he answers, "I still feel there are things about myself that I have yet to learn."

FOUR STUDENTS OF Kongo Zen Buddhism were meditating when this photograph was taken inside Shorin Temple on Japan's Shikoku Island. The lone westerner, and the only Occidental ever admitted to the monastery is Raoul Castillo, on the left. The reverse swastikas on the training uniforms are, and have been for more than 5,000 years, a Buddhist symbol.

The temple, he adds, is a place where one does very little talking and a minimum of communicating, while doing a great deal of listening. And through that listening one comes to learn about religion, about life and about himself.

Interest in Buddhism is continuing to grow in the western world, Castillo says, pointing to the proliferation of small temples and training halls in this country.

WITH THAT growth has come a realization to some extent of the widespread differences that exist within Buddhism — even within the ranks of Zen Buddhists.

"Ask 10 Buddhists what Buddhism is to them, and you will get 10 very different answers," Castillo says. This, he adds, is because Buddhism recognizes that there is no such thing as an unalterable truth, "for the truth is continually changing. A camera can give you the truth of the moment when its shutter is snapped. But the next day, or even seconds later, that scene has changed, and the truth that was pictured on film no longer exists.

"Thus if one person were to ask me what Buddhism means, I might give him one answer, and yet a very different answer if asked the same question by another person.

"AFTER ALL, it would be a poor doctor who would prescribe the same medicine for every patient. Religion, too, is a matter of individualization above dogma. At least it is such with the Zen Buddhist."

All the many Zen Buddhist sects are in agreement on this matter of the non-existence of unalterable, unchanging things, Castillo says. Just as all religions, Christianity, Judaism, Buddhism, Hinduism, Islam, et al, are in agreement in urging their followers to adopt the principles of human conduct embodied generally in the Bible's 10 Commandments.

That man so often fails to live up to that commitment does not, in the eyes of Raoul Castillo, disparage the religion.

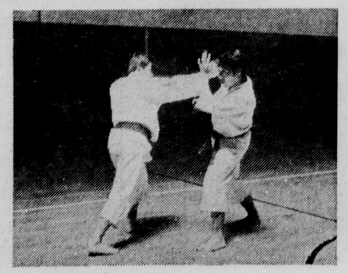

"IT IS NOT the religion that has failed, but the man," he says.

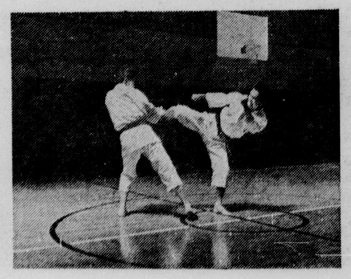

And to Castillo there is no more striking demonstration of the contrast between man's temporal ways and the religious life than the fact that such "kempo" activities as karate, ju-jitsu and aikido can be regarded or treated by some as a form of violence and a means of aggression, but by others as an expression of their religion and as a tool for inner peace and discipline.

It is for truths of this kind, not unchanging, inflexible truths, but truths nonetheless, that Raoul Castillo will be grasping when he returns to the cold, clean walls of Shorin Temple.

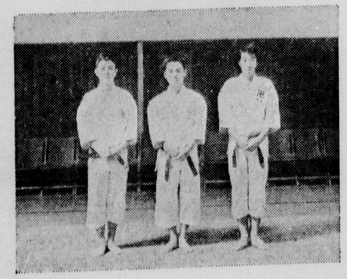

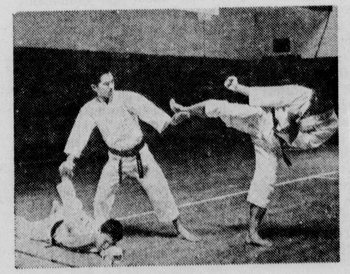

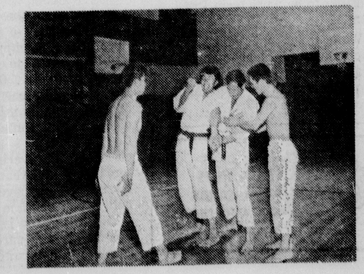

ALL THE action of such martial arts as ju-jitsu, karate and boxing are retained by Kongo Zen Buddhists, according to Raoul Castillo, second from the right in photo above, but stress is also placed on philosophical aspects.

5 Leaders In Times Of Crisis

They all had these qualities: courage, common sense, determination and acute intuition. In "The Responsibles" Pulitzer Prize-winning author and syndicated columnist William S. White presents a personal glimpse into the lives of five American leaders — Harry S. Truman, Robert A. Taft, Dwight D. Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson.

Perhaps the chapter on the "little man from Missouri" pinpoints this personal journalism best. Make no doubts about it, White is in Truman's corner all the way, selecting him as possibly the strongest president of the 20th Century. It is Truman's finesse in the events following World War II that left White so impressed.

Too, when White discusses Taft, who by all rights should have been President, he paints a giant of a figure who always stood above party politics in the national interest.

And on down the line, the days of Eisenhower charting the nation's course, the days of Kennedy — made stronger by the Bay of Pigs — when he had to be tough as nails in the Cuban crisis, and Johnson's great achievements on the home front, but the nagging war in Vietnam and the attacks upon him from the more "dovish" halls of the nation which led him to be a one-term President.

White's personal analysis of each makes for highly dramatic reading and it should be one of the top sellers of the young literary season of 1972.

GATES OF ASIA: A Diary from a Long Journey, by Jan Myrdal and Gun Kessle; Pantheon, 246 pages, $7.95. Reviewed by Larry Kramer.

"For want of a nail the kingdom was lost." For want of a map, "Gates to Asia" was almost abandoned by this reviewer in its early pages. That would have been unfortunate because despite that serious and obvious lack, the Myrdals open many windows on Afghanistan and Soviet Central Asia.

Good endpaper maps charting the route of their sporadic journeys would have clarified the spatial relationships within the little known world they criss-crossed in their tiny Renault 2CV.

"Gates to Asia", as the subtitle suggests, is a personal chronicle of the observations of Jan Myrdal and the photographs of his wife, Gun Kessle, made during travels in Central Asia between 1958 and 1965. They visited Afghanistan and Soviet Central Asia periodically, and North India once, as part of a larger odyssey which included China, South India, Ceylon, Burma and Nepal. These latter visits have been described in other books they have written.

As an analytic observer of foreign societies, Myrdal comes of good stock. His father, Gunnar Myrdal, a Swedish sociologist and government official, studied the condition of the Negro in America and in 1944 published "An American Dilemma," a classic of sociological observation and insight.

Jan Myrdal has not written a scholarly book. He aches for the nomad whose life is affected by the capricious whims of feminine fashions and by foreign and domestic policies shaped in London, Moscow and more recently, Washington. When women crave "Persian lamb" fur coats, the Afghan shepherd thrives in a modest way. When, with a new affluence the same ladies aspire after mink, the shepherd's meagre and precarious prosperity evaporates.

Afghanistan was a battleground in the struggles of Britain and Russia to extend their spheres of political and economic influence in the 19th Century. The fiercely independent Afghan tribesmen were never conquered, but their energies were drained and their monuments destroyed in the European grappling for Asian markets. What Kipling saw as "the white man's burden," Myrdal sees as the Afghan's curse.

Myrdal is a Marxist and his bias shows. But his intrinsic honesty and his real affection for the little man makes him as critical of the elitest Russian bureaucrat as he is of his British counterpart. He fails to see that the force destroying the Afghan way of life is neither socialism or capitalism, but industrialization with its seductive fruits and its voracious appetite for new markets.

Every reader who has had the opportunity to live in the presence of the natural wisdom of people who may be unlettered, but who are the beneficiaries of generations of accumulated "savvy" about their environment, will appreciate Myrdal's salt story. Central Asia is desert country and salinization of the soil is an ever-present danger. As Myrdal puts it:

"In classical Central Asiatic irrigation agriculture, one avoids salinization, but gets lesser harvest, . . .

"The costly American and Soviet irrigation projects in Afghanistan have (both) gone the same way; caused the soil to salt up, and for the farmers have meant economic catastrophe."

Myrdal is a romantic, but while his cry for the plight of the Afghan may be unrealistic, it is worthy: ". . . is there then no way out of poverty, exploitation, oppression and illness which will allow people to regain their dignity?"

Myrdal holds with the Afghan "hares" whom he admires and respects, but in spite of himself he is of the European "hounds" and therefore much like us, making "Gates of Asia" a book we can understand. It is not necessary to share his opinions to appreciate his feeling for the people among whom he traveled.

An Intimate Portrait Of Ireland's O'Casey

SEAN by Eileen O'Casey and J.C. Terwin; Coward, McCann and Geoghegan, 300 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by D.R. Henriksen

The old saying that "money isn't everything" receives a fatal blow in this biography of Irish playwright Sean O'Casey written by his wife, Eileen. She seems to have inherited the pen of her husband in skillfully writing such an interesting story. A close friend, J.C. Terwin, adds an introductory and aids Mrs. O'Casey with assemblage of her material.

It portrays the trials and heartaches that so many of the masters, past and present, have had to endure to make their dream a reality. Often penniless and with one trial after another, whether it be the death of their eldest son or the rejection of O'Casey's plays, their close and unwavering devotion throughout 37 years of marriage somehow never darkened until Sean's death in 1964.

Eileen O'Casey is a beautiful actress of Irish parentage who through appearances on the stage meets and falls in love with her playwright. Her eagerness to meet this great man ultimately leads to their marriage in 1927.

Such celebrities as Bernard Shaw, Augustus John, Harold MacMillan and George Jean Nathan were close friends. This book also contains never before published letters exchanged between O'Casey and Shaw.

Being a typical Irishman his pen often led him to write vividly about the tumultuous life and people of Ireland that he loved.

Despite poor health, he would remain in his study to carefully and slowly create his masterpieces. Although in some ways he may appear to the reader as odd, he, like so many others, made up for it in his writings.

A love of life that dwelt in this unique family brings a joy to the reader that cannot be easily forgotten. Only a wife, whom he so fondly referred to as the "pulse of my life," could pen such an intimate portrait.

A Political Scientist Views The U.S. Crisis

'Small Steps May Simply Postpone Clash And Controversy. The Need Is Not To Avoid Conflict, Even Polarization, But To Recognize Polarization As A Genuine Expression Of The Way Things Are, And Then To Transform Conflict Into A Synthesis Of Positive Change'

JAMES MacGREGOR BURNS
A commitment to liberty and equality

By DON KEOWN

UNCOMMON SENSE by James MacGregor Burns; Harper and Row, 196 pages, $6.95.

There is nothing original in the conclusion of James MacGregor Burns, political scientist, biographer and historian, that the American government and people stand today at a critical crossroads.

But what Burns attempts in his new book, "Uncommon Sense," is to point out the direction we should take.

It is not, he suggests, the status quo fixation of the conservatives who would continue blindly straight ahead and thus miss both forks. Nor is it the violent, wildly veering, eccentric courses advocated by many radicals and extremists.

But most importantly, Burns warns against the gradualism and the piecemeal approach with which liberals have traditionally attempted to repair and patch up the system when it falls upon troubled days.

"We have failed because we have tried to deal with deeply entrenched, interlocked sets of national problems through sporadic, piecemeal action," he writes. "We have acted in this fashion because our political institutions are disorganized and fragmented, our leaders improvising and opportunistic, our thinking pragmatic and 'practical'."

Burns reviews in detail those problems and our failures to deal effectively with them.

Rather surprisingly this Pulitzer Prize and National Book Award winner is less than stimulating in these more general discussions. One finds the going slow and his attention faltering.

It is in his more precise prescription of a remedy for our national malaise that Burns becomes more provocative and most interesting.

To begin with, he writes, we must commit ourselves to two great priorities: "First, the absolute, uncompromising defense of individual liberty, from negative liberties, such as the right of privacy, to positive liberties, like the right to demonstrate against the government. Second, equality — the expansion of social, economic, and political rights to provide for all Americans genuine equality of opportunity and a far greater equality of condition . . . This means, of course, the categorical abolition of poverty in the United States."

All successful movements in the American past have preached — if not practiced — equality and liberty, he argues.

As an instrument to execute such a program, the nation would require "a party fit to govern." The Republican Party, liberal Democrat Burns feels, is hopeless in this respect, and the third party idea is impractical. So his choice is the Democratic Party — but not the Democratic Party as it exists today.

The Democrats, he maintains, will have to rid themselves of their conservatives — "The time has come for bluntness; there simply is no room in the Democratic Party for conservatives." No purge would be necessary, he argues. "The party should simply become so clearly, forthrightly the reform-minded, liberal-radical party of the day that those who do not share its goals (would) see no point in joining it."

"Catering to conservatives is rapidly becoming as politically unrealistic for the Democrats as it is morally wrong," he asserts.

Such a basic reform, Burns theorizes, would attract to the party the brilliant, creative leadership required in the years ahead for a transformation of the national government.

One winces when Burns argues for stronger presidential leadership and for a tightening of presidential direction. There is no denying the weaknesses and chaos within the bureaucracy, but as a branch the executive adjunct of our government already threatens to overwhelm and suffocate the other branches, particularly the legislative. Perhaps what is needed is not stronger direction from a single source, but rather broader, better leadership from throughout our government.

Burns does agree that "the problem . . . will not be leadership, the availability of great talent, but the institutions that thwart and crush it, and the opportunism and false realism that demean it." And: "The remedy is the same as in 1776 and 1787 — to rediscover our overarching values, to recommit ourselves to them, to restructure our institutions to fulfill them, and to support and sustain leaders who will serve them."

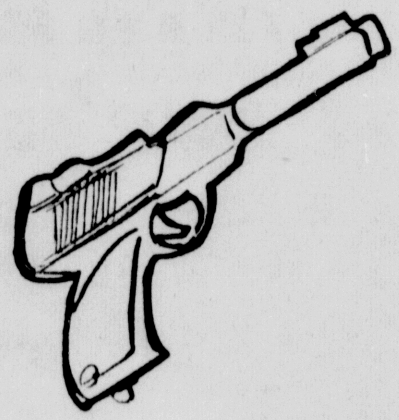

But Burns is most provocative and most challenging when he is most specific, as with his proposal for the new Democratic party — "a coalition of the concerned" that would constitute "a movement based on principle rather than expediency: that is, it would mobilize popular support on the basis of advancing programs and enacting policies rather than merely electing people to office."

He proposes for membership in his coalition the urban poor, the blacks, the young, organized labor and "sizable sections of the white collar, middle class sectors."

And he argues that, despite existing tensions among these groups and their disenchantment with the system, the proposed coalition is practical and achievable.

This latest Harper "suspense novel" is an illustration of what a clever writer can do with a police blotter — granted, a well-filled police blotter.

In "Malicious Mischief" it's the Glendale police who provide the cast and plot. The story centers around two cops in particular, their wives, and a lot of discussion about dogs.

The plot includes the shocking killing of a young mother and her two children by a hit-and-run driver in a Rolls Royce, a nearly blind old woman murdered by young punks, the beating of an over-the-hill cocktail waitress, and even a dognapper. There are other events thrown in, too numerous to detail, but the story is well tied up in 250 pages.

Along with the solving of all the mysteries (including the dognapping, which is a tough one to crack), there's a delightful touch of humor from time to time.

"Malicious Mischief" makes good reading for an evening of escape.

AMERICANS, suddenly made aware of the importance other lands attach to the game of table tennis, have taken a new interest in it. One of the few books of instruction in the sport available in this country has been "Table Tennis" by Si Wasserman, U.S. Table Tennis Association coaching chairman, published by Sterling as part of its Athletic Institute Series and priced at $3.50. Now a new, revised edition of the book has been issued with added material that includes photos of some of the great Chinese champions in action. It is a serious, detailed, well illustrated treatment of a game more difficult and demanding than generally regarded. The international rules of the game are included in this new edition.

"GARBO AND the Night Watchmen," edited by Alistair Cooke, is a new edition of a book first published in 1937 containing pieces by nine critics written the previous year and assessing the cinema of that time. Meyer Levin, Graham Greene, Robert Forsythe and Don Herold, as well as Cooke himself, are among the writers represented. Says the urbane editor: "What I admired, and admire, most in a critic is a personal point of view and the ability to express it cripsly, or passionately, or drolly or entertainingly, but above all intelligibly." The new edition from McGraw-Hill sells for $7.95.

"ACADEMIC GRAFFITI" is a collection of 61 humorous jingles by W. H. Auden about the famous — Edward Lear, Charles Dickens, Ludwig van Beethoven, et al —, each accompanied by a Filippo Sanjust drawing. Random House published the $5 book.

Martinique — It's France And Sunshine

Caribbean Island Offers Gallic Charm Plus West Indies Climate

There's a little corner of France where, even in winter, noses never get frostbitten, just sunburned; where the temperature is 80 degrees on the very day, at the very hour that it's eight degrees in Paris; where one brushes sand from one's feet in February, not snow.

We're talking about the French West Indies, those sun-soaked departements known as Martinique and Guadeloupe.

Over 4,000 miles may separate these Caribbean islands from Brittany, Normandy and Paris, but they are French to the core, nonetheless.

The tricolor never comes down from its perch atop official buildings, never! The gendarme here may wear a light tropical shaki instead of a heavy blue cape, but the shape of his kepi is like that worn by his Paris counterpart, the flic. And like the flic, he directs traffic with bravado, but his eye gives every passing Creole beauty more attention than standard safety rules call for.

HANDSHAKING is practiced frequently, and with as much flourish as in Marseilles; and the sacrosanct aperitif hour gathers as many Frenchmen to the bistros of Fort-de-France and Pointe-a-Pitre as it does in Nice. Still, these are the West Indies and the aperitif is probably not a pernod, but a potent punch, made of local rum and sugar syrup.

Until fairly recently, these islands were less known than their giant, tourist-minded neighbors. Few people, it seems, had ever heard of Guadeloupe and its dependencies — St. Barts, St. Martin, Les Saintes, Desirade, Marie-Galante — or even of Martinique, although this little isle has given five crowned heads to Europe, most notably the Empress Josephine.

Today the picture has changed.

The sleepers are awake, busy with the business of tourism. True they are Johnny-come-latelys, but it is true also that they are benefiting from mistakes made in other small areas. No skyscraping glass and steel seaside palaces here; tourism is taking shape, but with thought and deliberation.

FOR STARTERS, island airports have been enlarged, and now look like miniatures of Orly. And just as at Orly, when you ask for an English-language newspaper, you are handed the Herald Tribune — Paris edition, of course.

Good new roads have been built, making sightseeing an easy adventure. And what's to see?

On Martinique, there's Mount Pelee which in 1902 made a New World Pompeii of the city of St. Pierre; La Pagerie, the plantation that was Josephine's first home; HMS Diamond Rock, a 600-foot high boulder used as a British sloop of war in 1804. On Guadeloupe, there are also relics of wars with Britain, especially Fort Fleur d'Epee.

On both islands one finds surprisingly good museums, lofty volcanoes, and exquisite, trule primeval rainforests.

Like car rentals, yacht charters are enjoying a nice prosperity. Guadeloupe's Robert Gautier has imported six new ketches and sloops and priced them modestly. Crewed, a 40-foot ketch for two couples goes for less than $200 per person a week, tout compris including table wine. Or you can rent Farouk's former pleasure boat, the Diogene II, for a bit more and really live like a king.

Martinique is fast becoming a fashionable boating center and is building an immense new marina.

For night owls, the islands have dance halls and discotheques and even two casinos: one on Martinique, one on Guadeloupe. Neither has the glitter of Las Vegas, but that's as it should be. These are French islands whose most exciting evening activity is the ritual of a leisurely meal.

Because restaurants do an even bigger local trade than tourist trade, visitors have a wide choice of eating spots: Creole auberges high in the hills, typical French bistros in the "Cities," seafood houses in fishing villages where the morning's catch is that day's specialty. Some places, Chez Gerard, Le Grillardin and Le Foyal in Martinique, for example, are done up in provincial trappings; others like Chez Odette, Chez Rosette and Chez Violette in Guadeloupe are immaculate, but with a decor best described as reflecting the exuberance of Mesdames Odette, Rosette and Violette.

Martinique's luxurious 99-room Bakoua, located across

THE BRINGING HOME of the long, unwrapped, fragrant loaves of French bread for lunch is as familiar a sight in Guadaloupe as it is in Paris. In this case the route home for the bicyclists is the L'Alee Dumanoir, a palm-lined road outside Capesterre on the beautiful Caribbean island.

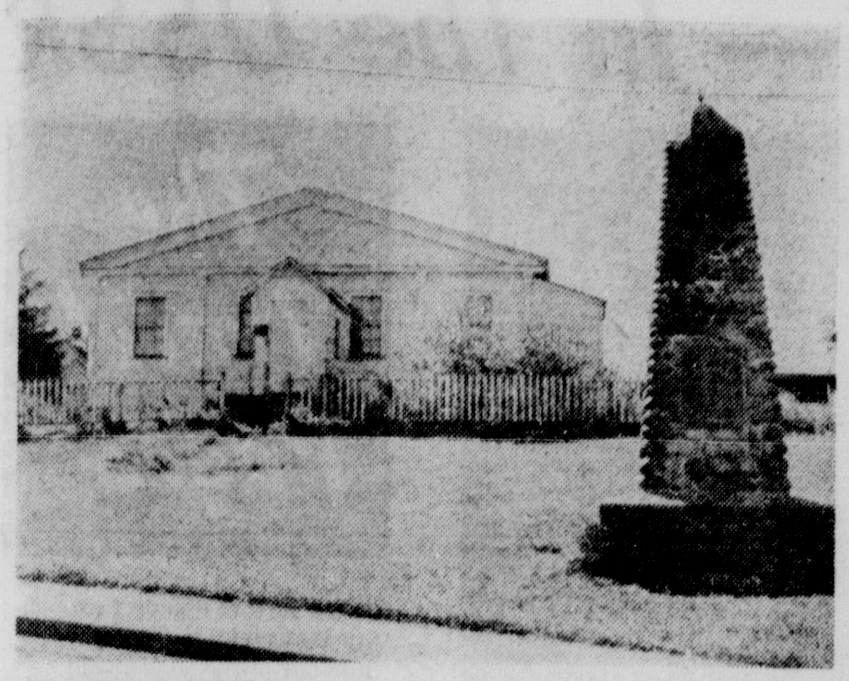

DRESSED IN THE traditional costumes of their islands, some pretty girls from the much-acclaimed Folk Ballet of Martinique pose in front of an imposing, handsomely restored plantation house. Martinique is a mecca for students of French colonial architecture, with many splendid buildings of that era still standing. Restoration has commanded major attention.

DR. WILLIAM DUNCAN's home and monument in Metlakatla, Alaska, will soon become a museum and library. Father Duncan wjs instrumental in establishing the Indian community on Annette Island prior to the turn of the century.

Father Duncan Remembered

More than a century ago, a young man sailed from England on a mission to civilize the most savage Indian tribe on the Pacific Coast of North America.

Today, members of that same tribe — residents of the community of Metlakatla on Annette Island in southeast Alaska — are taking steps to commit to history the story of that missionary, Rev. William Duncan of the Church of England.

The community plans to restore the home of Father Duncan as a museum and a library with the aid of a federal grant of $6,822.

It was about 84 years ago that this young man as a Protestant missionary led more than 800 Tsimshian Indians from Canada to establish a new community on an island in southeast Alaska. They gave up their homes and all of their worldly possessions to make the hazardous trip in open canoes.

Father Duncan and the Indians moved to Annette Island because they were unhappy with restrictions by the church and the prospect of being restricted to a reservation by the Canadian government in their original home in British Columbia.

In 1891 Congress passed a law setting aside Annette Island as a reservation for the Metlakatla and any other people who wanted to join.

Today Metlakatla is an up-to-date Alaska community of 1,200 persons with a cannery, sawmill, school system and other conveniences. There is a jet airport.

High on a hill overlooking the town is the "Christian Church of Metlakatla." At the time it was dedicated on Christmas Day, 1896, it was the largest church in Alaska and was known as "Mr. Duncan's Westminister Abbey."

Father Duncan led the new community from 1887 until his death in 1918 at the age of 86. The Indians erected a monument of a hand holding a torch because they said, "He brought us the light."

A Bit Of France In Caribbean

the bay from Fort-de-France, is an example. How Gallic the ambiance: croissants and cafe-au-lait for breakfast; mini-kinis at beach and pool; the call in French to come play tennis.

There's a civilized, unfrenetic quality to all Martinique hotels. The Diamond Roc, a 133-room dazzler on the south shore, gives you a feeling of escape even when fully booked. Moder, it offers all amenities, including golf.

For the water-sports oriented, Cap Est, a casual cottage colony on the Atlantic, has 50 rooms.

One mile out of town is the beautiful Martinique Hilton, as French Caribbean in flavor as it is American in name. There are spectacular views from the 154 rooms. During the day, the games are scuba, swimming, sailing, skiing; at night, they're roulette, 21 and baccarat.

A special kind of atmosphere, warm and cozy, is served up at the nice little Anse Mitan and the new Calalou, both a short ferry ride from Fort-de-France. In town, one can stay at the Europe, Malmaison or L'Imperatrice, named, naturally, for the island's most famous lady. Other mementoes of her era — antiques, prints and furniture — are found in lovely old manor houses that now take guests.

For those wanting anything but a home-like setting, best bet is the Club Mediterranee, a 600-capacity fun village that's been a resounding success since its opening two winters ago. Its sister operation on Guadeloupe, half the size, is equally popular.

There's Another Georgia — In The USSR

Its Capital City Reminds This Traveler Of Marin

By ANNE FAANES

She stands on the highest point of a hilly, terraced city, and dominates the skyline. Enormous, modern, her female contours belying a strength of steel, she shines silver against the sun.

In one hand is a goblet of wine, token of friendship. In the other hand is a half-raised sword, her warning for her enemies.

She is Mother Georgia, symbol of the spirit of Tbilisi, the capital city of the Georgian republic in the USSR.

IF MOSCOW IS the New York City of Russia, then Tbilisi or Tiflis is the Marin County.

From one of the older hotels (Hotel Tbilisi), the windows open out onto tree lined Rustaveli, the main street. There is an unobstructed view of Mount Mtatsminda with its funicular railway and ski like lifts. At the summit is the Panthenon (a large restaurant with orchestra) where one can sit on the veranda, sip fine Georgian wine, and eat the spicy food for which the region is famous.

THE VIEW IS like that from Mount Tam on a clear day. Tbilisi is spread below and one can see for a good 60 miles. A garden like park surrounds the restaurant, and if you're not prone to dizziness there is a ferris wheel in operation.

Nest led halfway down the mountain is St. David's Church, burial place of Georgia's famous poets, scientists, and Josef Stalin's mother.

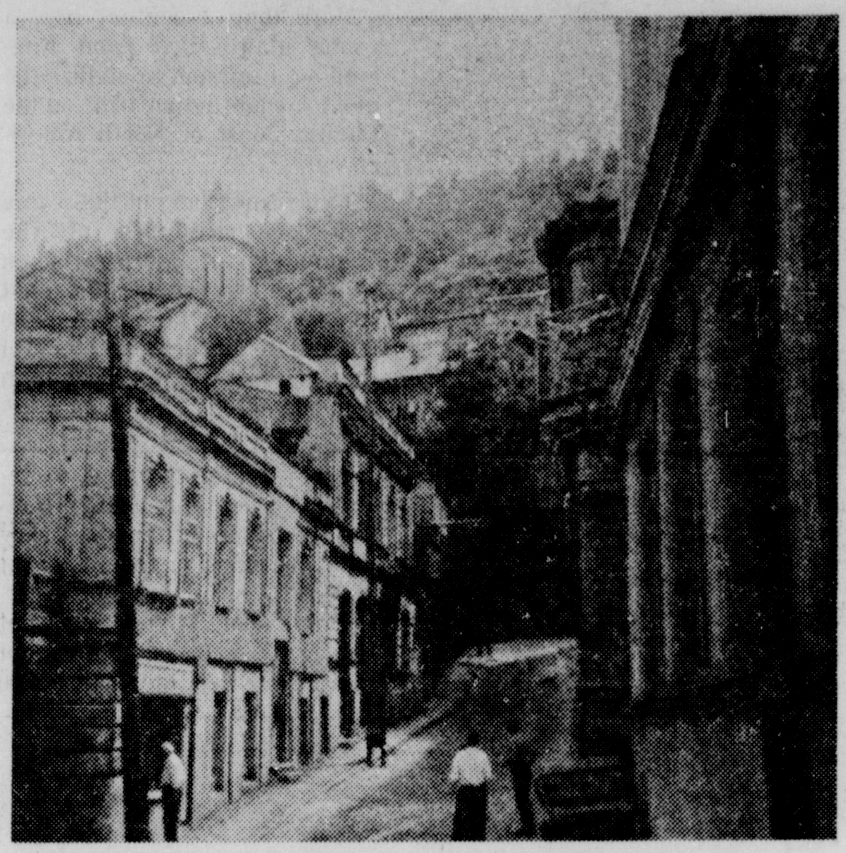

The hotel room had the view and the bathroom the lake. I had noticed a little wooden stand by the tub and soon discovered its use. As the water drained out of the tub it missed connections, gurgled, gave up, flooded the bathroom and finally disappeared through the drain hole under the stand. When I complained of this daily ritual I was assured it had been flooding for some years.

NEAR THE HOTEL is the main market place. It is a two-storied building about the size of one of our larger supermarkets. On the lower level set up in stalls is every conceivable variety of fruit and vegetable. On the upper, and main level, are the meats, fish and grains.

Pandemonium reigns as every vendor tries to outdo his neighbor in praise of his produce. Chickens and rabbits are brought in crated and purchased live. Never mind shopping, it's pure entertainment — except for the inevitable ques.

I had a chance to sample some of these wares on two different occasions.

One was during the two-day engagement celebration for a Kurdish girl. (The Kurds were originally nomad shepherds from Turkey and Persia, many of whom fled into Russia during World War I. They are Moselem by religion and some of the remoter tribes fire worshipers.)

MARIN TRAVELER Ann Faanes snapped this street scene in Tbilisi, the capital of the Soviet Union's Georgian Republic, during her recent stay in that colorful hillside city.

THIS PARTICULAR family lived on the ground floor of an old building facing the street. Their two rooms had been cleared of all furniture and two long tables set up with food that had been days in preparation. The party started on a Saturday afternoon and the celebration dance continued until Monday morning.

The two musicians were a flutist and a drummer, and the family and guests danced in a slow shuffling pattern on the street in front of their rooms.

The future bride, by custom, did not participate, but stood apart with lowered eyes. She was quite complacent, though, as her intended had paid her family two thousand rubles — and she was the homely daughter.

Her mother's eyes brightened each time she looked at her younger and prettier child, and remarked to a neighbor that her "price" would be much higher.

The musicians were relieved every few hours by alternates, for no matter who collapsed while dancing, the music remained uninterrupted. After awhile the muffled hand beat of the drum and thin minor wail of the flute became almost hypnotic.

WHEN I ASKED if the neighbors complained, I was told they overlooked special occasions.

In contrast to this celebration was a formal dinner I attended my last night in Tbilisi. It was in honor of the 80-year-old president of the Georgian Academy of Sciences, and there were mathematicians (his specialty) and their wives from all over the world present.

The candlelit table was set with linen and silver in a tastefully decorated flat. There were about 20 of us around the table and Russian, English and French were spoken interchangeably. In front of each place were small bottles of vodka and cognac and large carafes of wine.

After the five course dinner was consumed, everyone got down to the toasts and the serious drinking.

The custom in Georgia is to toast from animal horns edged in silver. One makes the toast, fills the horn with wine and drinks its contents non-stop till empty. Some of the horns are 2 feet long, and as there were 20 toasts in all, by the time the party disbanded at 2 a.m. we were all very merry.

I saw some of my dinner companions next day on the plane flying from Tbilisi to Moscow, and we were a bleary eyed and subdued group. We agreed, though, that Georgian hospitality is hard to beat.

Lake Havasu City is on the Arizona side of the Colorado River some two and a half hours southeast of Las Vegas by car. It first gained the limelight with the acquisition of London's most famous bridge and its reconstruction over the Colorado. Now the pub complete with serving wenches, Wattney's beer, tankards, hunting horns, mullioned windows and a menu that features shepherd's pies, Yorkshire pudding, fish and chips, and other English culinary treats has added yet another British touch to the resort. Other Lake Havasu attractions include water sports, golf, tennis and a benign climate. Nearby are ghost towns, state parts, Indian reservations and marinas. Plus the jutting peaks of the Chemehuevi Mountains.

Four Flowers Carry Off All-America Award Honors

Four new flowers have won the annual All-America Selections awards for 1972.

CARVED IVORY was awarded a silver medal, and the other three were awarded bronze medals.

To win an All-American Selections award, each of these flowers had to go through a rigorous testing program. They were grown at 30 widely differing test garden locations in the United States and Canada. And each one had to compete against the most popular variety in its class currently in commerce and be voted superior.

All-America Selections was founded by seedsmen and acts as a screening agency for gardeners. It is the only national organization for testing new flowers from seed. And through its extensive network of test grounds at universities and industry research centers, it makes sure that the home gardener gets new and different flowers that have been tested and proven before introduction to be superior to those in commerce.

The zinnia's clarity of color gives it an unmistakable look of quality, and makes an excellent contrast with the dark green foliage. Individual blooms are five inches wide, and of the cactus type. This means the petals are not flat and starched, but airy and soft, and this, coupled with the fine color makes Carved Ivory excellent for flower arrangements.

The new zinnia is an F1 hybrid, so the plants themselves are uniform, vigorous, and productive. The height is two and a half feet.

F1 hybrid marigold Gold Galore is a semi-dwarf hedge-type marigold. Each plant may have as many as 25 blooms at one time. And the blooms are large, full, and a fine solid gold color.

GOLD GALORE is outstanding in vigor and uniformity and is excellent either en masse or along with other All-America winners in a flower bed.

There are few other flowers that will give as long a sesson of bloom and as much color in your landscape as Gold Galore. And this marigold will take a beating from wind and rain and come out a winner, too.

This year's petunia winner, Circus, has large, double deep-salmon and white blooms. Each petal is salmon toward the center and white on the outside, and as the petals overlap, they create an interesting effect in the individual flower.

THE PLANTS are early-flowering and the flowers are well distributed over the plant, which makes Circus excellent either as a specimen in a container or as a mass planting in a flower bed.

Another plus is the compact habit of Circus — not much over one foot in height and not over two feet in width.

The fourth All-America flower winner for 1972, hollyhock Summer Carnival, flowers from seed the first year. And plants winter over and bloom well for many years.

Summer Carnival has attractive, large flowers. The centers are fully double with a single row of guard petals framing the double centers. The color range is the widest yet — scarlet, deep rose, rose, pink, yellow, and white. The plants are sturdy, five to six feet in height, and produce many, many blooms per plant.

START SEED of Summer Carnival early in the spring. It is excellent as a garden background plant or does a fine job up against a fence or wall.

In addition to the four 1972 All-America Selections winners, the winners from the past two years are quite popular.

THREE VEGETABLES EARN RECOGNITION AS THE TOP 1972 INTRODUCTIONS

Flavorful, productive, easy-to-grow —all describe the three new All America Selections winning vegetables for 1972.

The winners are Victory cucumber, which is a productive, disease-resistant type, and two modern red cabbages, Ruby Ball, an early variety, and Red Head, a later txpe.

Every year All-America Selections, which is a non-profit educational organization founded by seedsmen, supervises the testing of many, many new vegetables. There are 27 test gardens throughout the United States, Canada, and Mexico, and competent horticulturists at each location put the vegetables through a rigorous testing program.

ONLY THE BEST of the new vegetables are considered for an award.

Being resistant to disease makes a difference in cucumbers, since they are prone to many troubles. And disease resistance means not only that spraying is less important, which is a boon to home gardeners, but that productivity is greater, since diseases do not tap the plant's strength. Cucumber Victory is tolerant to both powdery and downy mildew, which often turn cucumber plants white during the growing season. It is also tolerant to scab and mosaic. In addition, Victory has considerable tolerance to angular leaf spot and to anthracnose, both of which can cause production problems.

VICTORY CAN BE used over a wider range of climates than other cucumbers because of its unusual disease resistance.

But the bonus points of Victory don't stop with just disease resistance. It's a female or gynoecious hybrid cucumber, which means it has a preponderance of female flowers. This, of course, contributes to its heavy yield.

Victory cucumber has an excellent flavor, is crisp and firm and has a fine dark green color. Its overall rating in size and shape for a slicing cucumber is tops. In fact, because of its fine color and quality, yield and adaptability, Victory is expected to replace many older types presently grown by home gardeners.

Ruby Ball, the earlier of the two new red cabbages, was awarded a gold medal.

Judge's comments on Ruby Ball from Pennsylvania, New York State, and California include, "A unique early red," "It will take over the early red cabbage market," and "An outstanding early red."

AND EVEN AT the All-America Selections trial in South Carolina, where you would expect a cabbage to do poorly because of high temperatures, the word is that Ruby Ball produced an excellent crop.

Ruby Ball is an F1 hybrid and extremely uniform. It is ball-shaped, has a short core, is solid, and has a nice sweet flavor. It produces five-pound heads.

Ruby Ball companion, red cabbage Red Head, won an All-America Selections bronze medal. It does an excellent job a bit later in the season than Ruby Ball.

RED HEAD IS an F1 hybrid also, and has fine uniformity, an excellent flavor, a nice compact head, and a dark red color.

A CHECKLIST FOR MARIN GARDENERS

✓ Plant annuals now in well-drained soil to get an early jump in color on spring. Pansies, calendulas and Iceland popoies are just some of the "best bets."

✓ Winter is the time for the most effactive spraying to control some of the most harmful pests and diseases. You can also strike a blow against mildew and rust during this period when deciduous shrubs are dormant and can take a spray better.

✓ Don't delay in the planting of your new bareroot roses. As the season progresses, stocks at the nurseries will thin and become less and less select.

✓ Continue to mow your lawn regularly. Even lower your mower a half inch until spring. And now is a good time to hit crabgrass and other weeds with a pre-emergent spray.

The Hearth Plus Hemlock Equal Cozy Family Room

Furnishing a family room is mainly a matter of matching the varied activities that will take place there, keeping the mood light and colorful, and planning carefully so that furniture and built-ins will serve multiple purposes.

A cheerful, well-lived-in family room begins with a fireplace, either of traditional masonry or a newer, free-standing metal model. People warm up quickly, socially as well as literally, around a fire.

An expansive, yet cozy, mood was established in one family room recently visited, that was completely paneled in one-by-four-inch western hemlock boards without grooves, installed vertically on the walls and horizontally on the pitched ceiling.

Because many family rooms are designed for boisterous activities as well as quiet chatting, such a nook or corner affords a welcome oasis away from the action mainstream. The natural wood paneling on walls and ceiling also soften the room, acoustically as well as visually.

On the wall opposite the hearth-reading corner, a desk is built in, with shelves above, allowing the room to serve as a home office. In some homes this could be an extra study area to allow children who share a bedroom to split up for concentrating on their work.

Cabinets with doors of matching wall paneling can hide a good supply of firewood. The ubiquitous television set, either a small portable or large color model, can be built-in along this wall with doors or louvered wood shutters to close it off when not in use. Shelves for books, games, hobbies and crafts are important, too.

Most of all, the family room that offers something for each member of the family, plus guests, will become an enjoyable leisure center.

Table That Folds, Expands And Enhances The Decor

By STEVE ELLINGSON

It happened first in the electronics industry, and then in the automotive industry. Now it has come to the home furnishings industry.

The "compact" concept, which in dining terms means high style on a small scale, is making itself felt as space becomes more and more a premium in today's smaller homes.

Gracious living calls for gracious dining, and there is no reason why the trend toward the compact cannot be completely compatible with that life style. And entertaining can be a joy when the hostess has the advantage of proper furnishings.

For Home Buyers

Shopping for a new home? For information on what you should know, write Department P525, Western Wood Products Assn., Yeon Building, Portland, Ore., 97204, enclosing 15 cents.

GIVEN AN attractive and functional table, the trimming can be half the fun of entertaining.

You can build just such a table with the help of a full-size pattern. Simply send $1 to Steve Ellingson, San Rafael Independent-Journal Pattern Department, Post Office Box 2383, Van Nuys, Calif., and ask for Expandable Table Pattern No. 334.

While the table pictured here was built of birch plywood, it can be constructed of a number of other varieties of plywood so as to fit the decor of the room in which it will be used.

The table pulls open to a spacious eight feet that will easily serve 10 persons. Half opened, it serves four. And the 32-inch width is ample for the most sumptuous dinner.

The exposed plywood edges of the table are covered with a matching, flexible wood trim — a thin veneer sold by all lumber dealers.

With the exception of the four gate legs, the table can be made from a single four-by-eight-foot panel of plywood. Thus the cost is slight. Nor is an elaborate set of tools required for this do-it-yourself job.

If you want to carry the project one step further, then inclose another 50 cents with your order and also request Pattern No. 347 which tells you how to build dining chairs that match the table.

ACTRESS CONNIE TOWERS shows you the folding and expandable dining table that can be built from a Steve Ellingson-designed pattern. At upper left, the table is in its most compact form. In lower photo it has been expanded to its fullest length of eight feet. There is also a pattern for matching chairs.

How Safe Is Your Home? Proper Illumination, Indoors And Out, May Be Your Best Protection Against Burglars And Accidents

Good Lighting Has Added Importance In Winter Months

By DOROTHEA M. BROOKS

Winter, with its shorter hours of daylight, makes lighting a matter of protection as well as a decorative requirement for the home.

Indoors and out, anytime of year, improper lighting can create a setting that is accident-provoking for the family, and appealing to the prowler.

Crime is on the rise in the city and suburb alike.

The American Home Lighting Institute (AHLI) and the National Safety Council recommend as one of the most effective crime preventatives a well illuminated home, including exterior entries, walks, garage or carport and garden area. "Prowlers seek the dark, and with the elimination of these shadowy areas," they say, "crime rates go down at an impressive lavel."

TO BEST JUDGE the lighting required by your home, AHLI suggests, turn on all lights interior and exterior, and take a walk around.

How well lighted is your entry? Can you see clearly someone standing at the door? Are any steps clearly marked for easy and safe walking? Is the garden path lit with post lamps or low-to-the-ground fixtures that illumine the surrounding shrubbery, as well as the path itself? Does your garage have a light which turns on automatically, or is it activated by a switch adjacent to the door? Is the walkway between garage and house well lit? This is prime area for prowlers.

If you can't answer yes to these questions, your lighting should be improved for your family's safety.

AHLI HAS developed standards of safe lighting which can be adapted to individual requirements. Out-of-doors, the Institute suggests:

Entrance. A pair of wall-mounted lanterns should flank the door, or a suspended fixture should be hung above the key side of the door. These should contain bulbs of at least 40 watts each for proper identification of callers. Back entries also should be well illuminated. Special care should be taken to have all stairs well lighted.

Walkways. Post lamps should be positioned every fifteen feet along the path. Low-to-the-ground fixtures are suitable also. Light should be directed downward so glare will not blind the walker.

Grounds. For emergency two weatherproof 150-watt PAR 38 floodlamps should be mounted high on trees or under the eaves of the house to give broad general illumination of the entire property. These should be activated by a switch inside the house. If any floodlights are to be used for other than emergency, be sure they are positioned so as not to disturb neighbors. Swimming pools and other possible outdoor hazards should be clearly illuminated.

Garage. One enclosed fixture, holding a 100-watt bulb, should be located on the wall either side of the car. The switch should be located directly adjacent to garage door for immediate lighting. A mounted lantern outside is a good idea here too, but if one is not used, keep car lights on until garage interior is lighted. A remote control switch inside the house will allow lights to be switched on and off conveniently from the safety of indoors.

FOR INDOOR lighting, AHLI makes these suggestions:

Bedroom. Surprisingly, this is the most dangerous room in the house, according to the National Safety Council. This is largely because falls result from the absence of good overhead lighting fixtures, and the lack of wall switches near the door. Groping for lamps in the dark is hazardous.

For a small bedroom, less than 125 square feet, AHLI recommends an attractive ceiling fixture, lit by one 120 to 180-watt bulb or three 40-watt bulbs. For a larger room, more than 225 square feet, either a large ceiling fixture can be used, or off-center suspended fixtures, plus recessed wall lighting, to softly illumine the room. A room of this size can combine bed-sitting room functions. Provision should be made, of course, for additional lighting as required — bed-lamps, reading, desk lamps and perhaps small safety night lights.

Kitchen. The second most dangerous room, accounting for 10 to 12 per cent of all falls, the kitchen requires both overall lighting and concentrated "task" lighting over individual work areas. A woman working, often in a hurry and under pressure, perhaps with small children or animals underfoot, handling hot utensils, using sharp knives, needs good light.

The ideal kitchen, according to AHLI, will include one general lighting fixture for approximately every 50 square feet of space. This should have a total of 175 to 200 watts incandescent or 60 to 80 watts fluorescent. Task lighting should include wall or cabinet-mounted 20-watt fluorescent tubes or 120-watts of incandescent bulbs for every three feet of counter space. The sink and range areas should be lit by wall-mounted brackets, located 14 to 22 inches above the appliance, with a minimum of one 30-watt fluorescent or 75-watt incandescent bulb as the light source. These will direct light downward on work areas.

Bath. For safety's sake, the bath must have a clear, strong light. Here a man shaves, a child or adult receives first aid, one steps on slippery, shower-wet floors.

There should be one ceiling fixture, recessed or surface-mounted, with two 60-watt or one 100-watt bulb. A cabinet mirror, essential for make-up or shaving, should be flanked on either side by one 20-watt fluorescent tube, or two 40-watt incandescent bulbs, shielded for shadow-free, glare-free light. If the mirror is wall-to-wall, there should be a row of shielded lamps.

AHLI stresses hair dryers, shavers, plug-in radios or other electrical devices never should be used while in the bathtub, because of the danger of electrocution. An electric cord in a pool of water can bring instant death.

Living room. For subtle, decorative illumination, downlights may be used. Reflector bulbs of 150 watts may be recessed into the ceiling along one wall, bathing in light one particularly dramatic wall, such as brick or stone, or emphasizing an arrangement of paintings or a prized piece of sculpture.

Overhead fixtures are being used increasingly for such decorative accent, such as a pull-down lamp over a game table or conversation center.

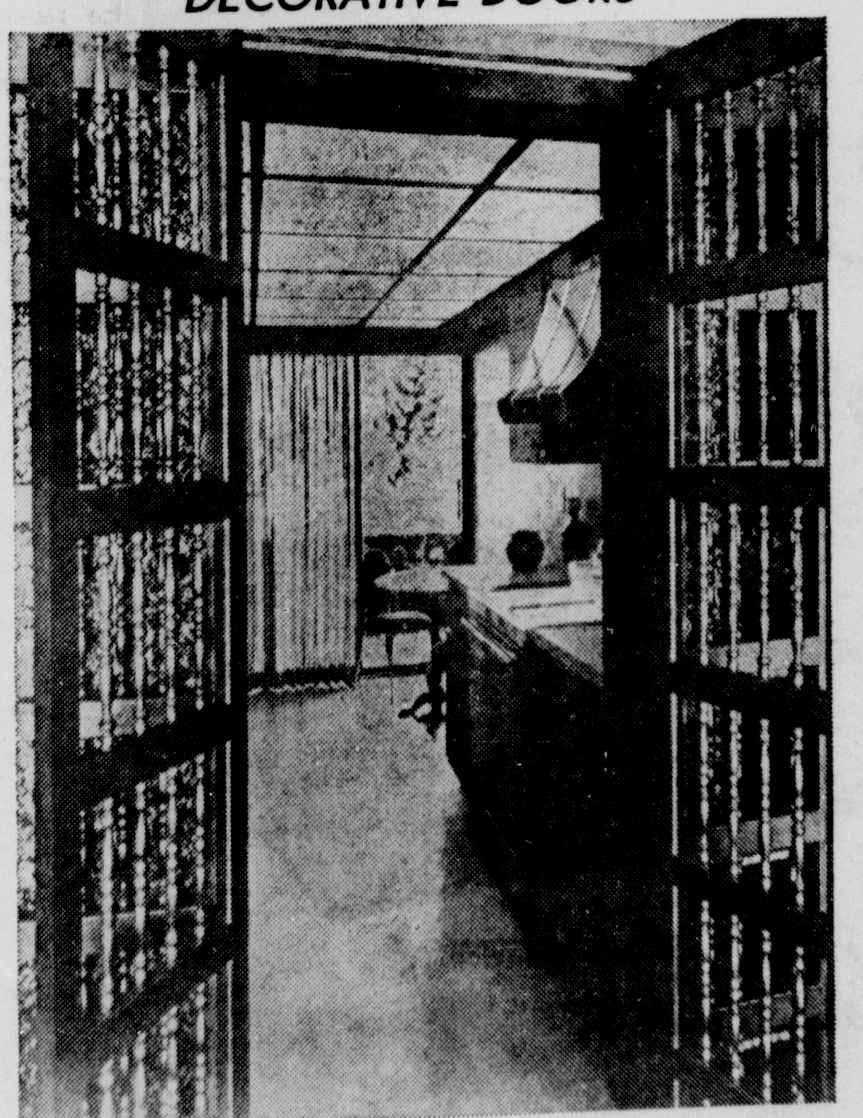

When the total room area is less than 225 square feet, a chandelier or other ceiling fixture holding no less than 200 watts of incandescent bulbs may be used for general lighting. Again, table lamps or wall fixtures will supplement general lighting and provide light for special purposes.

Stairs. People fall on stairs because they miss handrails, or there are no handrails, or they trip over a loose rug at the top of the landing, because steps are in a poor state of repair, or because someone left something on the steps to "take upstairs later." All of these hazards should not exist, first off, but if they do, proper lighting would make them noticeable.

TECHNICALLY, whether you have a sweeping staircase or rough, utilitarian basement steps, the lighting needs are the same. Interior or exterior stairs should be lighted top and bottom with at least a 75-watt bulb. Permanent night lights will provide added safety.

Stairway light should not shine in your eyes.

DECORATIVE DOORS

DOORS CAN ADD a decorative touch to any new home or to a simple remodeling job. Lumber dealers now offer them in a wide range of styles including this distinctive one embellishing the passage between a kitchen and dining room. A free, eight-page brochure, "Stock Doors, Windows and Mouldings," is available from the Wood Products Industry Fund, Box 1696, 1240 Bayshore Highway, Burlingame, Calif., 94010.

EVERY HOME can use a small workbench. And the version shown here can be built readily with the aid of a set of plans. Just send 25 cents to the American Plywood Assn., 1119 A St., Tacoma, Wash., 98401, and ask for Form 54-130. It can't be beat for rigidity since it is braced in all directions with plywood panels. There's a solid, double thick plywood surface that will accommodate a vise on either front corner. And the tool cabinet has hooks and dowels for large tools, plus shelves for nails, screws and small items. It is ideal for the basement or garage.

TV NOTES

By JACK GAVER

March 22 is the air date for the "Hallmark Hall of Fame" dramatization of the venerable stage comedy, "Harvey," which will star Helen Hayes and James Stewart on NBC 8:30 to 10 p.m.

A forthcoming episode in the CBS "Arnie" series will employ Maureen Reagan, 20-year-old daughter of the governor of California, who used to do some acting himself. It will be her first job in a video series.

ABC plans a 1972 presentation of a one-hour special entitled "William," described as "a light-hearted children's introduction to Shakespeare." Such distinguished British actors as Sir John Gielgud, Sir Ralph Richardson and Lynn Redgrave will participate in this presentation by Broadway producer Alexander H. Cohen whose writer will be former actress Hildy Parks, also known as Mrs. Cohen.

If one of your big worries has been the television future of Atlantic City's Miss America Pageant, relax. After six years of one-year contracts with NBC, the network and the pageant people have agreed on a long-term pact, lengths not specified.

And if you have your 1972 date book handy, jot down under April 10 the NBC telecast of the 44th annual Oscar Awards of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

GARY COLLINS stars as Dr. Michael Rhodes, professor of parapsychology, and Catherine Ferrar protrays his research assistant, Nancy Murphy, in "The Sixth Sense," a one-hour dramatic series exploring psychic phenomena and extrasensory perception. The program premieres tonight at 10 o'clock on Channels 7 and 11.

The Best From The Stereo Scene

Critic Lists His Choices From the '71 Record Crop

By JOHN SUNIER

This past year saw a number of interesting developments in the world of the long-play recording.

Both the classical and jazz areas have seen a preponderance of re-issues in an effort to interest consumers in worthwhile albums which do not require the record company to foot the bill for new recording sessions. The trend toward massive sets of the complete Beethoven Sonatas for Piano and other collections continues. The barrage of new rock and folk albums continues, with an accent on solo folk-type voices backed with sizable though usually very tasteful orchestral accompaniments.

Various four-channel and pseudo-four-channel discs were released, including Columbia's new SQ disc, which is said to rival discrete four-channel tape in accurate reproduction. Many of us have hooked up inexpensive pseudo-quadraphonic speaker arrangements for often astounding enhancement of our present two-channel stereo recordings and FM broadcasts. This can be done for the price of only a resistor and volume control, though adaptors are available ranging from $20 to $35. Speakers need not be wide-range, and often the $15 a pair variety — if free from annoying distortion — serve better than expensive speakers since they add presence without exaggerating rumble or record noise.

BEST ROCK: Traffic's "John Barleycorn Must Die" (United Artists UAS 5504) — Steve Winwood is of course the genius behind Traffic's blend of many musical influences. Their tight instrumental work is a marvel. Dig the great funky beat of "Glad," and "Freedom Rider" is a beauty too. Fantastic in pseudo-quadraphonic via four speakers!

BEST SOUNDTRACK: "Soul to Soul" (Atlantic SD 7207) — This is music from the most exciting "music" flick of the year, a sort of black Woodstock, but with more intriguing visual images than Woodstock, unadorned by multiple-image trickery. During the marathon Soul Festival in Accra, Ghana, a host of performers had held the audiences spellbound — Wilson Pickett, Roberta Flack, Eddie Harris, Les McCann, The Staple Singers, Ike and Tina Turner and The Voices of East Harlem. While Ike and Tina break the place up with the title tune plus "I Smell Trouble," it is Wilson Pickett that was the favorite of the Africans.

BEST RE-ISSUE, pop: "Long John's Blues," Long John Baldry and the Hoochie Coochie Men (United Artists UAS-5543) — Recorded during 1964 through 1966 in London, these classic blues vocals show an astonishing likeness to the various original performers of the tunes such as Witherspoon, Joe Turner, and John Lee Hooker. Young Baldry doesn't sound dated because good old blues are never dated. Though mono, the sound is good enough.

BEST JAZZ: "Journey in Satchidananda," Alice Coltrane with Pharoah Sanders (Impulse! AS-9203) — The widow of John Coltrane has been creating some strikingly beautiful jazz in a creative push engendered by her involvement in the teachings of her Indian guru Swami Satchidananda. The name means knowledge and existence. In addition to her piano work, Mrs. Coltrane also solos on the harp to glorious effect. This should appeal even to listeners who dislike jazz. Two earlier albums by Alice Coltrane might be of interest to those as turned-on by this one as I was: Impulse AS-9185 "Huntington Ashram Monastery;" Impulse AS-9196 "Ptah the El Daoud."

BEST HUMOR: "Don't Crush That Dwarf, Hand Me The Pliers" — The Firesign Theater (Columbia C 30102) — Just that title ought to tell you these guys are pretty far out. I've listened to their latest LP twice and still I'm not sure what's going on. But funny they are, as usual.

BEST BARGAIN-LABEL bargain: "Bach: The Complete

On The Stereo Scene

Brandenburg Concerti" — Chamber Orchestra of the Saar/Karl Ristenpart — (Nonesuch HB-73006) — Ristenpart is known for his dynamic versions of Baroque music and this package of two LPs is no exception. Better than most of the standard-price Brandenburgs, this one is distinguished by totally amazing horn work in No. 1 and the superb recorder duets in No. 4. Harpsichordist in No. 5 is the noted Veyron-Lacroix. Sound is excellent and the notes are extremely readable.

BEST OPERA: "Richard Strauss: Der Rosenkavalier" (complete) — Christa Ludwig/Gwyneth Jones/Walter Berry/Lucia Popp/The Vienna Philharmonic conducted by Leonard Bernstein — (Columbia M4X 30652) — A magnificent operatic achievement that will ace out Schwarzkopf's on Angel for many Strauss fans. Really exciting use of the stereo medium and well-presented notes enhance the four-LP set. This one has always put yours truly to sleep on the stage, but it's ideal on disc with libretto in hand.

BEST RE-TREAD of an oater: "Bizet-Schedrin: The Carmen Ballet" — Boston Pops/Arthur Fiedler — (RCA LSC-3129) — Take a Soviet composer's resolve to do something really different with Bizet's indestructible "Carmen," a string orchestra and 47 percussion instruments, and RCA's Dynagroove recording techniques in Boston's Symphony Hall and you have an LP that is one of the wiggiest classical music experiences of the year. This one is terrific on pseudo-four-channel too.

BEST "BEST-OF" album package: "The Tchaikovsky Album" featuring The Philadelphia Orchestra and Eugene Ormandy — (Columbia M7X 30830, seven LPs for the price of four —With seven discs, this massive box of records is obviously not a collection of excerpts. It includes the complete symphonies 4, 5 and 6, the Serenade for Strings, The 1812, Capriccio Italien and Marche Slave, Romeo and Juliet, The Polonaise and Waltz from "Eugen Onegin," and the ballet suites from Swan Lake, Sleeping Beauty and The Nutcracker. Whew! No orchestra in the world has a string section more suited to Tchaikovsky than the Philadelphia, and one of the Tchaikovsky symphonies (No. 6) made Stereo Review's Basic Repertoire choice list.

BEST VOCAL album: "Gypsy Songs by Brahms and Schumann" — Gachinger Kantorei conducted by Helmuth Rilling — (Nonesuch H-71228) — The Brahms "Zigeunerlieder" have long been a personal favorite of mine, with their lovely depictions of Gypsy life. A solo version featuring Grace Bumbry has been available for some time, but it is only with full chorus that the joyful music lives to the fullest. The choral ensemble with a mouthful of name is excellent in all respects, and on a pseudo-quad set up the realism is very convincing, as it is with most choral music. Bargain price too, please note.

BEST CHAMBER music: "Franck: Sonata for Violin and Piano in A;" "Brahms: Sonata No. 3 for Violin and Piano in D" — David Oistrakh/Sviatoslav Richter — (Angel SR-40121) — Most exciting performance of Romantic period chamber music I've ever heard. Taped at a live recital performance in 1968 in Moscow Conservatory, this unedited LP demonstrates the musical genius of both Peoples' Artists Oistrakh and Richter. Audiences in the Soviet Union never make a sound during the music —except for a couple of coughs between movements one is mostly unaware this is a concert performance until the tumultuous ovation at the conclusion. Truly a gem of an album on all counts.

BEST PIANO concerto album: "Rubinstein: Piano Concerto No. 4; " "Schwarwenka: Finale of Concerto No. 2" — Raymond Lewenthal, piano/London Symphony Orchestra/de Carvalho (Columbia MS 7394) — While Oscar Levant's classic performance of the Rubinstein was reissued in mono not long ago, this smashing stereo version by Romantic Revivalist Lewenthal instantly took the spotlight away. Besides the hair-raising keyboard pyrotechnics, the buyer receives a seven-inch LP with Lewenthal playing and discussing the music a la Lenny Bernstein style.

BEST WEEKEND-LONG symphony album: "Bruckner Symphony No. 8" — The Cleveland Orchestra/George Szell (Columbia M2 30070) — The double-disc album is one of the late Szell's crowning achievements. The last two Bruckner symphonies are more like Mahler in many ways, with polyphony of many dissimilar melodies, working against one another in some cases. Everything is just right here and the reproduction is enveloping, especially on pseudo-quadraphonic.

DEPTHS OF WINTER

White snows of the season

The great oak spreads
It's arms so wide
Shadowing life's small creatures;
The moon shines bright, up above,
Exhibiting natures creatures.
